Embargo Repeal Bloc Divides on War Credits

90-Day Provision Hit as Relaxation Of Johnson Act; Some May Desert

By Robert C. Albright
Chairman Key Pittman, of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, last night reported to the Senate a remodeled Administration neutrality bill repealing American wartime shipping rights with belligerents, except in a sharply defined Western Hemisphere area.

The committee ratified last-minute changes and Pittman filed its report as Senators supporting embargo repeal features divided on provisions to modify the Johnson act to permit 90-day extensions of credit to belligerent governments.

It was the first rift in growing support for the bill that now claims nearly two-thirds of the Senate in favor of arms embargo repeal. Protests sprang largely from a strong bloc of anti-Administration Democrats who oppose the embargo, but insist on more rigid "cash" provisions, without credit extensions to debilitate nations.

Wiley Denies Embargo Pledge

One Senate Republican whose vote had been claimed by some opponents of the bill, Senator Wiley, of Wisconsin, meanwhile disclosed he has made no pledge.

"I say that war will not come as the result of either the repeal or failure to repeal the present act," said Wiley.

"More and more people, like the American Legion recently in Chicago, are realizing that the repeal of the embargo act or the failure to repeal it, will not precipitate us into war. People are beginning to realize that men and women have different convictions on which is the better course and that these convictions are honest."

Wiley said that "dastardly propaganda" sent to the people that certain classes of Americans want war "is now being revealed in all its nakedness as a lie." The Wisconsin Republican said he was convinced that no class of Americans want war, that Senators and Congressmen do not want it and "I know that the President does not want war." He appealed for "calm, nonpartisan" debate in the Senate.

Schwellenbach Praises Bill
In a radio speech, Senator Schwellenbach (Democrat), of Washington, called the Pittman bill as reported "a careful, painstaking effort to correct our past mistakes" and declared: "Since it treats both sides precisely alike, it is as truly neutral."

Navy Clamps Censorship On Movements of Its Ships

In an order unprecedented in peacetime, the Navy yesterday directed that the movements and locations of naval vessels henceforth will be held secret.

With the exception of a few non-combatant vessels, such as transports and armored supply ships, no information will be given out as to the sailings and arrivals of ships or the number and identity of vessels at any port. Daily ship movement lists and fleet operating schedules are now "restricted" documents.

Officials said the order was made necessary by the enforcement of neutrality. Since the Atlantic Coast patrol was started early this month, movements of the ships in the patrol have been kept secret to keep possible violators of American neutrality from knowing where the patrol ships are operating.

It was explained that these restrictions were now being extended to all vessels which might be called upon for neutrality duty. While there is no coast patrol in the Pacific, officials said that should the need for enforcing neutrality arise there, the fleet would have to be hurriedly assigned to the task, and therefore the order was applied

Roosevelt Underscores Peace Desire

U. S. Has No Intention Of Entering Conflict, He Says; Resources Report to Be Secret

By William V. Newely.

There is no official thought of this country entering the European war, President Roosevelt said repeatedly and firmly at his press conference yesterday.

He does not intend to make public the forthcoming report of the War Resources Board, he said further, because the report is based on the United States being at war, while actually it is not a party to the conflict and has no intention of becoming a party to it. Hence, he added, there would be no advantage in publishing plans that have been discussed for co-ordinating and making use of the Nation's resources in case of future emergency.

The report itself, he pointed out, is being made only in line with the 150-year-old practice of periodically taking up various phases of the national defense. Army and Navy boards prepare defense plans every year, he reminded reporters.

Foresees No Emergency

Mr. Roosevelt volunteered none of the information given, and all of his statements were in reply to persistent efforts of reporters to bring about discussion of plans prepared for guidance should the Nation find itself at war.

Throughout the conference, the President's replies stressed again and again the intent of the Government to remain out of the present conflict.

He doesn't see any emergency ahead, he said in reply to a question whether the resources board would be recalled should any emergency require.

The board, headed by Edward R. Stettinius, Jr., chairman of United States Steel Corporation, is to disband upon completing its report, the President had announced previously. There was no story or controversy, he said yesterday, in its activities being continued.

There is nothing frightening about the report, he responded when it was suggested that the board's recommendations might, if published, make the American people more determined to keep the country at peace.

The board, he continued, has studied the possibilities of industrial expansion, the relation between increased production and transportation and power facilities, various forms of administrative handling of the stepping-up of industry, the relation of industry to agriculture, and other subjects.

Won't Talk of Embargo

No more attention has been given to regulation of prices than in any other of the last 20 years, he said, adding that it was only the desire to keep prices from going through the roof.

Literally, the President said, that is all there is to the subject of the industrial mobilization report.

Quit War or Face Disaster, Allies Warned; Turkey to Sign Anglo-French Arms Pact

Ankara Denies Pledges Conflict With Projected Soviet Alliance

By International News Service

Istanbul, Turkey, Sept. 29.—

Turkey today concluded agreements with Great Britain and France on the final texts of mutual military assistance and economic treaties with the Anglo-French Allies. It was stated tonight in Turkish political circles.

Reports from diplomatic sources in Ankara, capital of Turkey, said that the new Turko-British and Turko-French pacts will be signed in a few days upon the return of Turkish Foreign Minister Saracoglu from Moscow where he is now negotiating a new agreement with Russia.

(The London Daily Telegraph reported that a Turkish military mission left Ankara Friday for London.)

It was indicated that, despite her newly signed friendship accords with Germany, the Soviet Union is raising no objections to Turkey's entering into formal military alliance with Britain and France to cover the security of the eastern Mediterranean, the Dardanelles and the lower Balkan Peninsula.

Deny Pledges Conflict

The most responsible Turkish official quarters insisted that the Turko-Soviet mutual aid and economic agreements which are about to be announced will not impair the military pledges Turkey already has exchanged with Britain and France.

On the contrary, it was stated all of these agreements are intended to complement each other and thereby maintain the security and status quo of the entire Balkan, Black Sea and eastern Mediterranean zones.

Although exchanged last spring, following Fuehrer Hitler's seizure of Czechoslovakia and Premier Mussolini's occupation of Albania, the Turko-British and Turko-French military pledges had not yet been embodied in formal military treaties. This is about to be done as the result of protracted negotiations accelerated in the last four weeks by reason of the Anglo-French war upon Germany.

Russia's apparent acquiescence was explained in Istanbul and Ankara diplomatic circles as possibly due to a Soviet desire to block any future German expansion down the Danube Valley to the Black Sea where the Reich, now stopped in the middle of Poland, might ultimately menace Russia's back door.

Estonia Made Russian Vassal

By Witt Hancock,

Associated Press Staff Writer

Moscow, Sept. 29.—Soviet Russia concluded agreements today with Germany and little Estonia by which she gains about half of Poland, an outlet for much of her raw materials and greater power in the northern Baltic.

In three agreements with Germany she joined the Nazis to try to compel Britain and France to make peace on German terms, partitioned Poland with a warning to the rest of the world to keep hands off, and projected an economic program to furnish the Nazis with Russian raw materials.

A ten-year mutual assistance pact with Estonia made the little republic, formerly Russian territory, virtually a protectorate of the Soviet Union, which was given the right to establish naval and air bases and army garrisons on Estonian soil. This pact was accompanied by a trade agreement.

Implied Threat Seen

In the German-Russian agreements foreign observers saw an implied threat of possible Soviet military aid for Germany unless France and Britain agreed to peace.

The two powers said they would "concentrate their efforts if necessary in co-operation with the other friendly powers" toward ending the war. Should such peace efforts fail, the declaration went on, "the fact would thereby be established that England and France are responsible for a continuation of the war, in which case the governments of Germany and the U. S. S. R. will consult each other as to necessary measures."

The second agreement, which, like the others, was concluded by German Foreign Minister von Ribbentrop, Josef Stalin and Premier-Foreign Commissar Molotov, was called the "German-Soviet Russia border and friendship treaty."

It divided Poland into two parts

Italians Fear Axis Will Be Berlin-Moscow

Fascists Hope Hitler Will Agree to a Polish Ethnic State

By Herbert L. Matthews,

Copyright by New York Times.

Rome, Sept. 29.—Italy was preparing today to throw all her weight behind the forthcoming peace move of Hitler and Stalin.

It is the belief and desire of the Italian government that war should end now on German terms, but it is sincerely hoped that the division of Poland is not as definite as the Russo-German pact states.

If Hitler does not offer to constitute some form of Polish state on ethnic lines, Italians on their own pronouncement would have to recognize the injustice of the situation.

Events are moving with dizzying speed while Italy stands aside and watches Germany and Russia divide eastern Europe. As things are going, the Rome-Berlin axis will very soon become a Moscow-Berlin axis. To the victor go the spoils, and Italy is no victor by the accord announced in Moscow today.

However, things may seem worse for Italy than they really are. There is still plenty of secret diplomacy going on and Mussolini is a hard man to beat. He has not played his cards yet and until he does it would be rash to say that Italy has lost the game.

If there should be peace, Italy might well gain in a general settlement. There is some hope that Hitler might agree to a Polish state and that Russia would be satisfied with Baltic gains and leave the Balkans alone, at least territorially.

It is pointed out that the Italian Ambassador to Moscow did see Von Ribbentrop this morning, so that Italy might not have been kept as much in the dark as everybody supposes. Moreover, people are remembering that Il Duce also has had his dreams of a great Russo-German-Italian triangle.

However, in practice that dream is turning into something of a nightmare. Even in this latest accord, Germany and Russia say that Poland is their "exclusive" field. Moreover, it is realized that more is coming and there might well be some disagreeable surprises for Italy in the Balkans.

For that reason, Rome is awaiting anxiously the results of the Russo-Turkish conversation. It does not help to learn that Turkey and Germany are arranging a new trade pact. Everything which is happening in the Balkans favors Germany.

Allies Reject Truce On Soviet-Nazi Terms

French Official Calls It Blackmail From Barbarians

By Taylor Henry

Associated Press Staff Writer

Paris, Sept. 29.—The French government gave official indications tonight it would reject any Russian and German proposals for peace made on the basis of the partition of Poland.

The government's position was made plain even before a formal peace offer had been made.

In a radio broadcast Jean Giraudoux, commissioner general of information, called the German-Russian move for peace "blackmail" and added that Britain and France were fighting against "the barbarism of one of the most modern and well-organized nations of Europe."

At the same time foreign observers here said they considered the visit of French President Albert Lebrun to the front lines as a further indication that France was making no plans to accept any peace proposals which result from Russia and Germany splitting up Poland, France's eastern ally.

Giraudoux said Hitler and Stalin

London Refuses To Be Frightened Or Fight Russians

By Raymond Daniell,

London, Sept. 29.—Great Britain cannot be frightened into peace with Germany and will not be jockeyed into war with Russia.

That is the consensus of informed persons in this blacked-out capital on the first anniversary of Czechoslovakia's sacrifice to the cause of peace. A year of peace that was not peace and a month of war that was not war here intervened since the historic session of Parliament a year ago this afternoon when Sir Neville Chamberlain announced that Adolf Hitler had invited him to Munich and its appeasement.

Having made the fateful decision to submit to what the British prime minister called a "dread arbitrament of war," the British people are determined to carry on and see it through until the job of crushing Hitlerism and ending the threat of aggression in Europe is finished.

Bund Leader Kuhn Jailed When Bail Is Raised to $50,000

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 29.—Fritz Kuhn, leader of the German-American Bund, went to the Tombs tonight in default of an unexpected increase in his bond to $50,000. A hearing on a writ of habeas corpus to effect his release was obtained by his counsel for tomorrow morning.

Kuhn, indicted four months ago on a charge of stealing $14,548 from his own pro-Nazi organization, has been free on $5,000 cash bail. He is scheduled to go to trial next month.

Today, District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey's office, obtained from General Sessions Judge Cornelius F. Collins an increase in the bond, contending Kuhn had intended to leave this jurisdiction.

Counsel for the bund boss termed the increase outrageous, and after more than four hours in a vain attempt to post the $50,000, surrendered him to the Tombs while they obtained the habeas corpus writ from Supreme Court Justice Thomas Noonan.

Kuhn, wearing a week-old mustache, listened impassively as James Neary, of his counsel, argued before

Judge Collins: "I don't believe Kuhn would leave the country, and I don't think he wants to leave."

"The district attorney is the district attorney," replied Judge Collins, "and he gets the information. The defendant is involved in matters of public interest."

"If the Washington authorities wanted him," rejoined Neary, "they certainly would pick him up. He's been before the Dies committee and he's ready to go again any time he's wanted. If the Federal people wanted him they'd have a man here to pick him up. He's here to be taken."

"You don't know whether there's a G-man here or not," said Judge Collins, as spectators chuckled.

"I must take into consideration the incentive to make him (Kuhn) flee from America, possibly by airplane or in disguise," the judge added. "I don't think he'd resort to any scheme, but the district attorney strongly urges the bail."

"He won't run away or commit suicide," Neary asserted.

"No. Kuhn isn't the type of man to commit suicide," the judge dryly ended the colloquy.

Stalin Reported Insisting Hitler Halt Conflict At Any Price

Berlin, Sept. 29.—Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop flew back to Berlin tonight from Moscow with a new political frontier between Germany and Russia, a treaty of friendship with Russia and an exchange of letters about trade between the two countries.

These are facts, impressive in themselves, as booty from a two-day invasion of Moscow, but they are small change compared to the hopes, schemes and legends already spawned in Berlin.

The German "peace offensive" has now opened fire along the entire front. From the Rhine to the Pacific there are 400,000,000 people—one sixth of the world—now demanding peace, according to Berlin. If it is refused, they are threatening, according to the same simple formula, to blast the western democracies into the Atlantic Ocean.

Decide at Once, Allies Told

German newspapers have hammered this moral home today in sermons on the futility of continuing the war in which they conveniently quoted the vague phrases of the documents which Von Ribbentrop brought back with him.

And official circles, paid in Berlin to interpret foreign policy to neutral reporters, abandoned the defense of the present Soviet-German agreement tonight entirely in a burst of eloquence about "traditional friendship" and "the Soviet determination that Germany shall never be defeated," which would still make strange reading in Moscow.

[In blunt short-wave radio warnings Germany told Great Britain and France to decide at once between peace and war or the new German-Soviet accord will be used against them "in even more drastic manner" with disastrous results, according to the United Press.]

"[It is up to the Allies.] Nazi leaders said, asserting that the new agreement signed in Moscow by Ribbentrop stood by itself as the final peace offer of Germany and Russia and that further approaches were unnecessary.—Editor's note.]

Protectorate Might Emerge

The main outline of this official story is as simple as its expression tonight is loud and complicated. The new frontiers of Poland—farther east than the military line, but still giving Stalin his Ukrainian and White Russian "blood brothers"—will convince France and England that Poland has once again been transferred from the map to the history books. To restore it will require not only a defeat of Germany but a successful war against the Soviet Union.

At the same time, England can still hope to salvage prestige. Official hints were being dropped in Berlin tonight late last night that if England is willing to confer, some sort of neutralized Polish protectorate might still emerge. This would presumably include the territory Josef V. Stalin strangely renounced last night, and a similar contribution of land from the German war loot.

Finally—so the foreign and propaganda ministers in Berlin argued tonight—the alternative is worse than death or dishonor for the west. The Soviet agreement to consult with Germany in case the friendly desire of Soviet Premier Vicheslav M. Molotov to see German-Soviet trade return to its highest former levels are being trumped here—and even the official voices raise several octaves in pitch—as an alliance for

And Ann Sheridan, who put "oomph" in the word glamour, just sat back and smiled. Having forsaken her Hollywood duties to visit Washington for personal appearances at the Earle Theater, she was experiencing her first Senatorial reception on Capitol Hill yesterday.

Union Protests Entry of Czech Shoe Workers

The Maryland and District of Columbia Industrial Union Council (C. I. O.) yesterday announced support of efforts by the United States Shoe Workers of America to halt the immigration of foreign shoe workers.

A statement by Sidney R. Katz, secretary-treasurer of the council, protested the granting of permits by the Immigration Service, Labor Department, for entry of Czech-Slovaks to work at the Beta Shoe Co.'s new plant at Belcamp, Md.

"The policies of this firm can only serve as a disruptive factor in the American shoe industry," Katz asserted. "They will tend to lower wages and unduly exploit, if they can, Maryland youth."

According to Katz, the Beta firm has applied for entry into the United States of 500 workers in addition to the 100 already here. He pointed out that there are estimated to be 20,000 to 30,000 unemployed shoe workers in this country.

British Lose Planes in Raid On Nazi Fleet

5 Downed in Sea, Berlin Says; London Admits Casualties

By International News Service
London, Sept. 29.—An armada of British warplanes today attacked the German fleet in Heligoland Bight, obviously in retaliation for Nazi air bombardments of British warships in the last few days.

The attack was carried out at a low altitude to insure effective bombing and, as a result, the Nazis claim five British planes were shot down either by anti-aircraft fire or by German fighting planes which sped to the scene from nearby bases at Cuxhaven, Wilhelmshaven and the Kiel Canal.

(The German war ministry stated that six British bombers "unsuccessfully attacked our naval forces" and claimed that five of the Britons were shot down over the open sea by Nazi pursuit planes.)

The British air ministry announced the raid in an official communiqué which stated: "On September 29, units of the Royal Air Force carried out an attack upon ships of the German fleet in Heligoland Bight."

"Despite formidable anti-aircraft fire, the attacks were pressed home at low altitude. "Some of our aircraft have not yet returned."

"The German version said the raid was 'without success,' and added: 'As the enemy headed westward, they were intercepted by German pursuit planes. After a short air fight five British aircraft were shot down and fell into the sea.'"

This was Britain's second air attack on this strategic German area, close to the entrance of the Kiel Canal, since the beginning of hostilities.

Area Heavily Fortified
A few days after the declaration of war, a royal air force squadron based on land in the air and at sea and it was claimed that at least two German vessels were badly damaged by bombs, although the Nazis denied this. The Nazis claimed to have shot down six of the attacking British planes in the first raid.

In the first attack, the Allies claimed to have disabled the German pocket battleship Gneisenau. French sources subsequently claimed the Nazi warship was sunk, although this has never officially been verified.

Neither the British nor the Germans revealed any further details of today's attack and it was not known which ships of the Reich's comparatively small fleet were affected.

However, it is known that the Heligoland area is strongly fortified on land, in the air and at sea by every possible defense, for it is this region which is responsible for the defense of Hamburg as well as for the protection of the vital Kiel Canal between the North Sea and the Baltic.

Reduced Poland Offered for Peace

all time, "ice cold, logical, clear, 100 per cent and unchangeable."

There are three details to which no official German answer can be had tonight. The first is the question—widely spread even among private Germans—that Stalin's renunciation of the land between the Vistula and Bug Rivers was accompanied by a demand that Germans do likewise set up at least a shadow of the former Poland, and call off the war in the West at any price.

The second is the statistical fact that Soviet exports to Germany at their all-time high, amounted to less than 10 per cent of Germany's total imports, while the English blockade has cut off nearly 30 per cent of German imports.

Finally, there is the Third International, which has lengthened its shadow over Europe by more than 200 miles and cut its first deep wedge into western Europe since Marshal Mikhail Tukachevsky led his Red Army to the gates of Warsaw in 1920.

There are many thoughtful Germans tonight—but not on the Wilhelmstrasse—who remember that the same Marshal Tukachevsky was shot by rifle fire two years ago for trying to make a deal with Germany without the necessary safeguards for Communism. One of the best German scholars on the Soviet Union of Stalin and Molotov, Dr. Hermann Greise, published a book in March of this year, called "Is a Development of the Soviet Union Towards a National State Possible?" and answered it with a resounding "No." But Nazi diplomats have a different answer, and it is now clear that they are doubling and redoubling their bets on it.

Nothing Said About Balkans

The German confidence that the Bolsheviks are now going to support Hitler through thick and thin was explained tonight as being based squarely on the separation of spheres of interest which have been started by the Polish agreement.

Soviet interests in the Baltic have admittedly been recognized as paramount after yesterday's Soviet-Estonian treaty.

Nothing is stated here officially about southeastern Europe and it is perhaps significant that von Ribbentrop did not see the Turkish foreign minister when he was in Moscow.

The bait of a resurrected, if considerably whittled Poland, which Germany is now expected to hold out to England and France in return for peace, was suggested tonight in official foreign press conferences, and it is hinted at in a few discreet editorials which will appear tomorrow. For example, the National Zeitung, which is close to Air Marshal Hermann Wilhelm Goering, will point out that "the new lines through Poland give Russia little more than a future fate of the region which will be Polish until now depends solely on Germany."

were trying to force an "eastern peace" on Europe.

Such a peace he described as regimentation of other nations to conform to Hitler's and Stalin's ideas of government.

In a previous speech Premier Daladier declared flatly France is fighting to prevent her own "enslavement" by Germany.

Giraudeau recalled that just a year ago today at Munich Hitler promised a new peace which "would help carry Europe ahead into a future of labor, health and honor."

While Lebrun visited the army on the Western Front, Air Minister Guy La Chambre, accompanied by Joseph Vuillemin, chief of the air force, flew to the front for a 10-hour inspection of air bases.

In a front line ceremony Lebrun formally decorated an officer with the Cross of the Legion of Honor and two noncommissioned officers with the Military Medal. They had been wounded in action last night.

Poles Repeat Defiance

In Paris Polish Ambassador Jules Lukasiewicz handed the French Undersecretary of Foreign Affairs Champetier de Ribes, a declaration that his government never would accept the German-Russian proposals.

The fact that the French gave wide publicity to the Polish declaration, which said the Poles counted on France and Britain to carry on the war until final victory, was considered by foreign diplomatic observers an indication that any formal proposals from Berlin and Moscow would be turned down promptly if and when made.

Giraudeau declared in his broadcast that Hitler counted on making a peace in the west on the model of that in the east.

"Perhaps Hitler will propose it to us Giraudeau asserted. "On the condition that we deny not only our treaties and our tastes, our convictions, our religions and our liberties. He will give us what he calls peace—that is a short delay which permits Germany to digest its prey and to force arms to snare its next prey."

(A protest similar to that of Lukasiewicz was made in London by the Polish Ambassador to Britain.)

4 Scandinavian Ships Sunk in Last 36 Hours

Survivors Say 3 Were Sub Victims; Fourth Hit North Sea Mine

Copenhagen, Sept. 29.—Three neutral ships sunk in Scandinavian waters during the 36 hours ending tonight were declared by survivors to have been victims of submarine attacks. A fourth went down after striking a mine.

In all, nine ships have been sunk in northern waters since September 22, when the Akenside, British freighter loaded with coal, was torpedoed off Hilo Island on Norway's southern coast.

The recent sinkings emphasized the statement of Capt. Gebriel-Jern, sunk yesterday off Kristiansand, that it was "impossible now to get across the North Sea except by convoy." He said a submarine sank his ship.

"Germany has a barrier of submarines cooperating with airplanes," he said.

The Takstas, Norwegian freighter, was torpedoed early today in Korfjord on the west Norwegian coast.

Shortly afterward came information that the Norwegian Salas struck a mine and sank in the North Sea off the Danish coast.

The third ship reported sunk in the 36-hour period was the 3,378-ton Swedish cargo vessel Nyland, loaded with iron bound for Antwerp. She was sunk early yesterday off the coast of Norway.

The Swedish Minister in Berlin protested the sinking of the Nyland. Demanding compensation, he said the sinking was contrary to international rights.

Casualties in Scandinavian waters now include three Norwegian ships, three Swedish, two Finnish, among the neutrals, and the British Akenside.

Warning Fails To Weaken British

racies, as implied in the latest flowering of the Nazi-Soviet rapprochement, can swerve the British from that determination.

Rejection Seems Unanimous

The unanimity with which the ordinary citizen, press and officialdom, pending consultation with Paris and the framing of a formal statement on policy, rejected the suggestion that Great Britain and France lay down their arms and accept the finality of Poland's dissolution was impressive.

The latest collaboration of Josef Stalin and Adolf Hitler through their respective amanuenses, German Foreign Minister von Ribbentrop and Russian Premier Molotov, toward reason of Mein Kampf, now an outdated best seller in Germany, completely failed, if the purpose was to win victory for Germany in a war of nerves.

There is no reason to suspect that British resistance to the bait expected to emanate soon from Berlin, Moscow, Rome or any other neutral capital will prove less staunch. However, until the tempting offer which Hitler is expected to make as an alternative to continued war has been submitted and rejected skepticism will continue in some quarters.

Perhaps it was no accident that the British air raid on the Heligoland naval base took place today soon after announcement of Russo-German determination to divide Poland, which they chose and force a peaceful acceptance upon objectors in the west.

Russia Not Underestimated

The British do not underestimate possibilities of joint Russo-German military action, even if it be limited to planes, tanks and men to operate them. The latest development in the Russo-German friendship was discussed in all its gravity by members of the cabinet, and it was said a statement would be issued only after consultation with the French.

Meanwhile it was disclosed that when the Soviet Ambassador to London, Ivan M. Maisky, visited Lord Halifax only last Wednesday, he gave the British foreign minister two-fold assurances. These were that the Soviet intended to maintain what it calls neutrality a word whose precise meaning the British are not anxious to have defined in Russia's case, and that Russia would be willing to accept the German proposals to reopen trade negotiations envisaged when a British mission visited Moscow.

In the light of these assurances the British are not inclined to view the situation with any marked increase in anxiety, taking the position that the worst diplomatic reversal was sustained when the Russo-German nonaggression pact was signed, precipitating the war.

What has happened since—the invasion of Poland and today's threat of even closer co-operation to hold the spoils—has held to be but a logical sequence of events of which none is in the least surprising.

Poles Less Complacent

Polish Ambassador to London Raszynski appeared less complacent than unofficial British opinion about Russia's agreement to let Germany gobble half of his country provided the Soviet Union permitted to assimilate the White Russians and Ukrainians. Mr. Raszynski has ceased to exist and a country which after 30 years has been erased from the map by the German and Russian armies, issued a communique tonight stating he had made a formal protest to Lord Halifax against the latest partition of Poland. The Polish nation, the ambassador said, regards the "act of brutal violence as null and void."

Poles Gain 1,500 Yards

The heaviest fighting of the last 24 hours was down the Moselle River Valley, where military advisers said the French advanced some 1,500 yards to the outskirts of the German villages of Besch and Borg.

A light German counter-attack half a mile to the east was said to have been repulsed.

Heavy French artillery fire, the dispatches said, drove the Germans out of the woods bordering the road leading to Borg. Then the infantry, preceded by tanks, dug in to hold it. The first infantry patrols were said to have found only wounded Germans left in the woods, others of the enemy having been driven out by the artillery.

Polish Restoration Pledged

(Germany and Russia divided Poland about equally rejected outside interference with the partition and agreed to try to compel Britain and France to end the war against Germany.)

Lukasiewicz said the Polish government "counts as firmly as ever on final victory of the Allies to assure Poland's restoration."

Tomorrow's edition of the Voelcher Beobachter is so preoccupied with this new "peace offensive" that even the army's daily account of new triumphs is wiped off the front page. The war itself is in danger of being relegated to the libraries and museums in Berlin, along with other forgotten relics of ancient history—the Rome-Berlin Axis.

4 Scandinavian Eyewitnesses Find Westwall Still Growing

Breaking Through It Would Cost Dearly, Inspection Reveals

By Louis P. Lochner,

Associated Press Staff Writer
With the German Army on the West Front, Sept. 29.—Traveling for three days along 600 miles of Germany's Westwall has given a group of foreign observers an indication as to why the Western Front is so quiet.

This group of six was confronted with much evidence in support of the German conviction that a tremendous sacrifice of men and material would be the price of a foreign army's attempt to force its way through the mass of mines, barbed wire entanglements, steel and concrete obstructions and crisscrossing bunkers in fortresses erected by the Germans.

In the party was a former chief of the general staff of the Finnish army, now representing a large Finnish newspaper.

Questions Answered Freely

He expressed the opinion that it would be costly for any force to attempt to break through the Westwall, but conceded that theoretically nothing is invincible.

German officers showed us around the fortifications and answered questions freely, explaining though certain figures, locations and other military information were not to be used in our dispatches.

They said the apparent calmness of the German troops was caused by their faith in the strength of the fortifications. We saw some of the soldiers employed in helping farmers harvest their crops. Others were helping residents of some towns abandon their homes. Many were seen playing cards and other games.

Food for 18 Days

Officers told us the bunkers in the front line of defense could hold out for 18 days, as far as food was concerned, if they should be cut off from the rear.

Despite their feeling that the present fortifications are adequate, the Germans are continuing to erect additional units.

"The Westwall will never be finished, just as a forest never ceases to grow," one commanding general told me.

Expansion Goes On

German officers asserted that every day some additional bunker was being added or some new fort built. The general staff was represented as considering the present fortifications "quite adequate," yet their expansion goes on.

We were told that daily more anti-aircraft guns, more artillery, more engineering troops were arriving from Poland.

A stock reply of German officers was: "We are getting stronger every day, now that Poland is finished."

Italy Still Hopes For Polish State

and Russia. There has not been a single move which has given Italy any tangible benefits since the war started.

It seems quite clear that with Russia allied to Germany and playing a great part in European affairs, Italy must accept a secondary role. Before the war, there was no greater power than Italy in central Europe and the Balkans, and that power was a friend and partner. Now there are two, and one of them is a stranger, so to speak.

Still Anti-Communist

Fascist Regime Fascists today take a typically Fascist line when they write "We said, we repeated and we say, that we are, and will be anti-Communist" although we justify as an able maneuver the German diplomacy which instead of letting a state of 100,000,000 inhabitants jump at its back has launched it with all strength against its enemies.

On that basis Italy intends to stand aside watching and waiting, losing ground while the war continues, but ready to gain it in peace. It is only by a peace settlement that Italy can get her spoils of victory quite aside from the humanitarian more involved.

Hence Italy is going to second the Russo-German peace proposals strongly.

Tonight's Catholic newspaper Avenire gives a version of Mussolini's peace plan which is certainly authoritative. "Today more than ever, Il Duce's plan is the only safe haven for Europe and civilization. It is a plan which can take place in three steps: 1, solidarity of all neutral states for the limitation of the war; 2, armistice; 3, form a conference for the revision of the Versailles treaty, and the creation of a new European order."

Adm. Ellis To Head Forces In Atlantic

To Receive Johnson
In Command of
East Coast Forces

Rear Admiral Hayne Ellis, one-time aide to the Duke of Windsor and former naval intelligence chief here, today will assume command of all American naval forces in the Atlantic.

He will relieve Rear Admiral Alfred W. Johnson at Atlantic Squadron command and chief of the neutrality patrol aboard the battleship, New York, squadron flagship, at Norfolk.

ADM. ELLIS will come here for duty with the Navy general board.

Under its new commander, the East Coast force will reach greater combat strength than at any time since the Atlantic fleet was abolished a decade ago, and its ships joined the main fleet in the Pacific.

Now consisting of three battleships, one large training ship, 13 destroyers and four heavy cruisers, the squadron will be enlarged by 40 reserve destroyers being fitted for sea.

Most of these ships will be used on the new Atlantic coast patrol, enforcing American neutrality over 32,000 square miles of water adjacent to the Eastern seaboard.

In Navy 43 ears

A veteran of 43 years in the Navy, Admiral Ellis was sent to China soon after graduating from the Naval Academy in 1900 and served in the Boxer Rebellion and the Philippine Insurrection.

During the World War he was on duty with the Hydrographic Office and the Bureau of Navigation.

When the Duke of Windsor, then the Prince of Wales, visited the United States in 1919, Ellis was his aide during his stay here.

From 1922 to 1924, he was aide to Secretary of the Navy Denby.

In 1931 he was director of naval intelligence, and since 1934, he has commanded the fleet training squadron and been in command of the Ninth Naval District at Chicago.

Admiral Johnson is a former chief of naval intelligence. He saw active service in both the Spanish-American and World wars, receiving the Distinguished Service Medal for commanding the destroyer fleet in the Atlantic.

He was Minister to Nicaragua in 1930 and supervised a national election in that country during the Marine occupation.

Topper Named Aide

Lieut. Comdr. James R. Topper, until recently commander of the Naval Torpedo Factory in Alexandria, has been named aide to Admiral Ellis.

In another order Lieut. Comdr. Frank W. MacDonald, of Washington, and four other naval officers were ordered to fit out laid up destroyers and take them to sea on neutrality patrol.

MacDonald, a 1924 Naval Academy graduate, has been aboard the battleship Oklahoma with the main fleet in the Pacific.

A native of Alabama, he married the former Henrietta Maria Scott, of Washington. He will command the destroyer Sands.

Commander Thomas G. Peyton was detached from the Naval War College and directed to command Destroyer Division 60 and the Ellis, which will be his flagship.

Lieut. Comdr. Donald F. McLean was assigned to command the Montgomery.

Lieut. Comdr. Charles J. Stuntz, the Wickes, and Lieut. William C. Latrobe, the Hale.

O'Connor Gives Paroles to Two Mothers-to-Be

Third Expectant Case, Girl Bandit of 17, Poses Problem

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Sept. 29.—That two children, yet unborn, might never know the stigma of birth behind prison bars, Gov. Herbert R. O'Connor today decreed the release of their prisoner-mothers.

Parole of the two expectant mothers was announced in the parole list approved by O'Connor, which included the release of six men and the conditional pardon of a seventh.

Motherhood opened the bars for Mrs. Rose McKee, 47, already the mother of eight, sentenced to 18 months for contributing to the delinquency of minors in Allegheny County in May.

Dorothy Louik, a Baltimore girl sentenced to six months in June on a similar charge, was also released to prepare for her motherhood in November.

"I consider the interest of society demands that they be released at this time," Gov. O'Connor said.

The Governor established a precedent for his administration with the release of the two mothers-to-be, and incidentally posed himself a tougher problem when he must decide the case of Mrs. Lorraine Baker, 17-year-old girl sentenced to five years in prison September 18 for participation in a taxicab holdup.

Mrs. Baker is also an expectant mother, but her crime is more serious than those of the women released today.

Judge Eli Frank, in sentencing Mrs. Baker, refused probation, stating evidence indicated Mrs. Baker led her male companion, a former minister, into the crime.

Gov. O'Connor must decide whether to release Mrs. Baker for the birth of her baby, despite her more serious offense. He has not indicated whether the precedent set today would be followed in the Baker case.

Among those ordered released by Gov. O'Connor, who approved parole board recommendations, were:

Wilfred Coates, colored, sentenced to 18 months for tobacco theft in Calvert County. All but five months served. Held rehabilitated and "not a criminal type."

Howard McCullum and Almos Green, colored, sentenced to four years for assault with intent to kill in Calvert County. Six months each to serve. Prison records good; satisfactory parole programs worked out. "Not professional criminals."

War Expected to Curtail Sale of Yule Soldier Toys

Parents Already Shunning Articles Which Bring a Reminder of European Conflict; Miniature Planes Still Popular

By Gerald G. Gross

There seems to be some difference of opinion as to the influence of the European war upon the sale of toy firearms and military playthings.

"I don't think Santa Claus will deliver many guns, tanks and such this year," said a toy buyer in one downtown department store. "You can tell now, from the way mothers behave at the counters."

"When her son fingers a pistol and asks mother to buy it, she grabs it away nearly every time and suggests a football, a game or something else more peaceable."

We're using that as a tipoff for our Christmas displays. We'll show very few guns."

But listen to another store with a large toy department:

"Soldiers, war tanks, ammunition, trucks, cannon, etc., are selling exceptionally well. Mechanical submarines are definitely in eclipse."

We expect to do a good business in this line of merchandise due to the war in Europe."

Appeals to Youngsters

A third store reported that, with the exception of airplanes, playthings symbolizing murder and mayhem are definitely in eclipse.

"They still have their appeal to kids," said the buyer, "but their parents say 'no.' Besides, there will be more new varieties of other kinds of toys available between now and Christmas than ever before."

One of the featured attractions will be an electric train equipped with a record player for sound effects. When the locomotive rolls into the station there will be that authentic hiss of escaping steam. When it pulls out you'll hear genuine chugging, wheezing, the whistle and all.

"If fathers monopolized their boys' trains before, imagine what they'll do with them now," the buyer commented.

Chinese Checkers Popular

In the next 86 days, less Sundays, you'll be seeing Wizard of Oz and Pinocchio dolls, banks and trinkets wherever you go, according to the toy experts. Two of them, asked what will be the best selling game for Christmas, predicted the distinction will fall to a new game based on the principle of dominoes, but streamlined.

Chinese checkers, however, still retains its popularity, they all declared, and probably will remain up among the game leaders.

American-made toys will be more numerous than ever, they said. "We believe that the American people have decided they can make and get better products here than abroad," according to one.

Gov. Price Gets $3,586,428 Health Budget

Extension of Public Service to All 55 Counties Urged

By the Associated Press

Richmond, Va., Sept. 29.—The State health department today recommended an appropriation by the General Assembly to provide for the extension of organized public health service to every county in the State by July 1, 1942.

Dr. I. C. Riggan, State health commissioner, who presented the department budget to Gov. Price and his advisory committee on the budget, asked a total general fund appropriation for the biennium 1940-42 of $1,608,630, an increase of $681,615 over that for the two years ending next June.

Asks $82,713 First Year

The total health budget, including funds from special revenues, totaled $3,586,428 for the next two years.

To organize health services in the 55 counties now without them, Dr. Riggan asked $82,713 the first year of the biennium and $220,729 the second year.

Following the health department hearing, representatives of the three sanatoria submitted their requests, two of which showed decreases because of no additional requests for capital outlays.

Dr. W. E. Brown, superintendent of Blue Ridge Sanatorium, asked $372,804 for the next biennium, compared with $486,515 appropriated in 1938; Dr. J. B. Nichols, of Catawba, $416,307, compared with $443,195 in 1938; and Dr. J. Belmont Woodson, of Piedmont, $620,439, compared with his last appropriation of $369,605.

Earlier this afternoon the committee received a request from a delegation representing the Miller Manual School, of Albemarle, for $26,204.25, which spokesmen said was due the school to correct an unintentional error which occurred in 1937.

Other Agencies Ask Less

The State Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, whose revenues not only support it, but also provide several million dollars a year for distribution to the State and the localities, asked $13,500,770 a year, compared with $13,546,110 a year during the current biennium.

The Unemployment Compensation Commission also asked a smaller amount. Its two-year budget totaled $12,050,300, compared with the previous $12,787,210. A reduction in the estimates of benefit payments accounted for the reduction in the U. C. C. request.

The State Corporation Commission asked $586,680 for the two years, compared with its previous appropriation of $514,976. Of the increase, however, $50,000 represents the aeronautics division fund, collected from the gasoline tax on aviation gasoline.

Pastors Face 'Moving Day' In Pulpits

Dr. Oscar Randall To Give Final Sermon As Part of Change

Tomorrow—October 1—will be an ecclesiastical "moving day" in Washington and vicinity, as several new pastors are welcomed to pulpits, and one preaches his farewell sermon.

The Rev. Calvin H. Wingert will be installed as pastor of Grace Reformed Church and the Rev. Raymond A. Vogeley as leader of the Christ Lutheran congregation, Bethesda; the Rev. Virgil Lilly will deliver his initial message at Rockville Christian Church, and Dr. Oscar J. Randall will give his last address at Potomac Heights Community Church.

Meanwhile, Canon Raymond L. Wolven, Bishop Freeman's chaplain, and former vicar of St. Andrew's Episcopal Chapel in College Park, Md., will preach as new minister in charge of the Episcopal Church of the Ascension, Twelfth and Massachusetts avenue northwest. Officials of Calvary Baptist Church announced that the Rev. Edwin H. Tuller, of Conroy, will assume the assistant pastorate on October 15 as successor to the Rev. Frank E. Johnston, Jr. No successor to the Rev. Samuel Allison, former assistant at Calvary Presbyterian Church, has been selected.

Installation Rites

Installation rites at Grace Reformed Church, working place of the late President Theodore Roosevelt, are set for 11 a. m. with Dr. Scott R. Wagner, president of the Potomac Synod, in charge.

Graduates of the Reading, Pa., High School, Franklin and Marshall College at Lancaster, Pa., and the Eastern Theological Seminary of the Evangelical and Reformed Church at Lancaster, Pa., will be installed as new members of the church.

Dr. Oscar J. Randall, former pastor of the Rockville Christian Church, will be installed as pastor of the Potomac Heights Community Church at 8 p. m.

He founded the Oakbrook Reformed Church at Reading during his ministry days, later assumed his first pastorate at the Faith-Oakbrook Church in that city, and seven years ago was called to the Norristown Church, from which he received a call to the local congregation. He was president of the Norristown Church of the United Brethren in Christ, and also of the League. He and Mrs. Wingert were married in 1932.

Long outstanding in the Washington religious field, Dr. Randall two weeks ago announced his resignation because he felt "the demands of the position required a younger man." He organized the congregation 16 years ago as Washington's first independent national church, serving from 1923 until 1928, and from 1934 until now.

Asked about his future plans, Dr. Randall said he will leave next week to live with his son, Charles M. Randall, in Lansdowne, Pa. A congregational send-off is set for the early part of the week. He has just turned 70. He has been married to Mrs. Randall for 45 years.

Vogley to Be Installed

The Rev. Mr. Vogley, former pastor of the Bethlehem Lutheran Church, New York City, will be installed as new pastor of Christ Lutheran Church, in services set for 3 p. m. tomorrow, with Dr. Gerhard E. Lenski, pastor of Grace Lutheran Church, officiating by authority of the president of the Eastern District of the American Lutheran Church.

Successor to the Rev. Henry J. Whiting, pastor and founder of the congregation who resigned to accept a position as assistant superintendent of the Baltimore Lutheran Inner Mission Society, the Rev. Mr. Vogley is a graduate of Capital University at Columbus, Ohio. In 1930 he married Gertrude Mees, daughter of the president of Capital University, Ohio.

During his last pastorate he served as president of the American Lutheran Ministerial Association of Metropolitan New York, was selected to head the Lutheran Conference Youth Commission, and in July directed "Lutheran Youth Day" at the World's Fair.

The Rev. Mr. Lilly comes to Rockville from the Christian Church of Shenandoah, and succeeds the Rev. Ernest Bryan.

Church of the Week Episcopal Church Conducts House-to-House Campaign

People Lacking Any Affiliation Approached in Drive; Vestry Committee Expected to Visit Silver Spring Group

The Episcopal Church of the Ascension, among the most active congregations in the Silver Spring community, is now conducting an intensive house-to-house survey to determine the Episcopalian population there, and to contact people lacking any church affiliation.

Expected to be finished by the end of October, the survey will be followed by a visitation by a vestry committee, probably early in November, according to the Rev. Joseph A. Hauber, rector since 1932, and chairman of the 16-parish house-to-house census committee.

Community interest always has been reflected in the church's activities, said the minister yesterday in the study of his home on Eastley street, stressing that parishioners of many denominations are attending the various functions.

Describes Club Work

He went on to describe the work of the Men's Club, which will launch its fall and winter season on the third Tuesday of next month. Dinners, lectures and other programs of a cultural nature are arranged by the group, of which Dan Bowie, Capitol Avenue, is official, is president.

Graduates of the Munich Conservatory of Music, the Rev. Mr. Hauber is an ardent student and lover of classical music, and since coming to Ascension has striven to have inspirational music retain its proper place in the church's life.

One of his initial moves last summer was to conduct young people's cultural "nights" in the parish hall, featuring electronic reproductions of classical gems. He also rendered organ selections at evening worship services. Mrs. Florence Burdick leads the choir, with Mrs. Thelma Nixon as organist.

Young people of the congregation will begin their season on October 8, when new officers will be elected. Two representatives of the group will serve as delegates to a coming youth conference at the College of Preachers, Washington Cathedral, where reports on the recent youth convocation in Amsterdam will be given.

Women's Support Cited

The fine support of women parishioners has been one of the blessings of the Ascension rectorship, the cleric pointed out, praising the work of the Women's Guild, led by Mrs. Frank Neumann; the Women's Auxiliary Guild, under Mrs. T. B. Larimore, and the Ladies' Guild, of which Mrs. Charles Leizer is president.

Heavy contributors to the church, the Women's Guild sponsors musicales, plays, card parties and other

Trade Union Employment Shows Gain

American Federation Of Labor Reports Only 9.6 Now Out of Work

Employment of trade union members is at a higher level than at any time since the fall of 1937, according to early September reports to the American Federation of Labor, made public last night.

Trade union figures from 24 industrial figures show only 9.6 per cent of the membership out of work in the first part of this month, as compared with 14 per cent in September, 1938, and 23 per cent in September of the previous "recovery" year.

"Workers in general, however," said an A. F. of L. statement, "have not fared so well, for according to our estimates the total number unemployed in the United States is still close to 10,000,000, which compares with less than 7,500,000 in September, 1937."

Reporting a steady decline in the total number of unemployed since July, the statement continued:

"Suddenly now, with business activity advancing 13 per cent from mid-August to mid-September and prospects for further increases ahead, we see some hope of finding jobs in private industry to replace WPA."

"This hope depends, however, on preventing increases in work hours." It declared that "labor is determined that there shall be no such extension of hours of those already employed."

The forty-four week is now established by union agreement over a wide area of American industry," it said. "This hour schedule must be maintained. It is unthinkable that employers who have any conception of their responsibility for the general economic welfare would ask their workers to accept longer work hours while there are still 10,000,000 unemployed."

The Federation issued its report while the minimum hourly wage for the giant textile industry was being fixed at 12½ cents by Wage-Hour Administrator Elmer F. Andrews.

Andrews announced his approval of the wage a few hours after President Roosevelt said he had no news now on reports that Andrews will be replaced. Usually reliable sources have reported that Col. Philip F. Fenwick, an Administration "double-shooter," is scheduled to get the wage-hour job.

Shortage Reported
Harrisburg, Pa., Sept. 29 (AP).—Pennsylvania WPA authorities reported today they have had difficulty finding enough relief labor to fill the State's Federal work quota of 130,000.

Col. Philip Mathews, State administrator, wrote Gov. Arthur H. James that on September 22 there were 28 counties in which less than 100 men were available for assignment, and said it had been necessary to "drain dry the available labor supply in some counties."

Interior Clerks' Rush for Pie Helps to Test Navajo Rugs

Scientific selection to develop the perfect Navajo sheep and the shuffling of Interior Department employees to their lunch counter are adding to the glory of the Navajo rug.

Six rugs produced at the Government's Southwestern Range and Sheep Breeding Laboratory in New Mexico were placed on the Interior Department cafeteria floor, just where the rush is greatest toward the counter, on February 17. The tramp of feet in testing endurance qualities of a variety of wools in the rugs, for the purpose of guiding the Navajos in their $300,000-a-year industry.

To date, 151,000 persons have shuffled across the rugs. Periodically, scientists take them to the Agriculture Department's Beltsville experiment station to see how the different wool varieties are lasting. But the rugs are only slightly worn, as yet.

All this, says the Indian Office, is but a small part of a scientific enterprise aimed at improving Navajo sheep, increasing the output of wool and mutton to offset the increasing depletion of the Navajo lands.

Similar experiments have been under way for 70 years, although the present ones are more extensive than the earlier days. At the Southwestern laboratory many types of sheep are raised on an 18,000-acre reservation. In the laboratory their wool is woven into a variety of yarns.

Potential Insult

Close on the heels of the reported reconciliation between President Roosevelt and Senator Glass comes an announcement by Attorney General Murphy that Floyd H. Roberts is being considered as a successor on the District bench to the late Justice Cox. Mr. Roberts' nomination for a similar post in Western Virginia was overwhelmingly rejected by the Senate last February.

It is a well known fact that the Senate vote was not based on Mr. Roberts' qualifications to serve as a judge. Senators Glass and Byrd considered the nomination a slap at themselves. The action of the Senate was generally interpreted as a means of informing the President that he will not be permitted to use Federal patronage for the purpose of disciplining members of that body. Nevertheless, appointment of the rejected candidate to the District bench would be inexcusable.

Since Washington is not represented in Congress, the President does not have to consult Senators with regard to judicial appointments here. That, however, merely accentuates his responsibility to choose competent members of the local bar without regard for partisanship. Too frequently in the past District judgeships have been used to pay political debts to lawyers from the States. Aside from the injustice of such appointments, they always handicap the local court because nonresident jurists are unfamiliar with local practices.

To select Mr. Roberts for the present vacancy would be an even more flagrant resort to unsound practice. It would force the District to pay a political debt with which it has no concern. It would put the President in the position of using the voteless District as a sort of dumping ground for candidates denied access to the bench in their own communities.

Such an appointment would be the more indefensible because of the impressive endorsement the local Bar Association has given District Attorney David A. Pine. After considering a number of candidates for the vacant judgeship, the association decided that the qualifications and public service of Mr. Pine are such as to justify a departure from its usual practice of sending several names to the Attorney General. When local attorneys of Mr. Pine's caliber and experience are available, it would be an insult to the District to offer the post to an outsider previously rejected for the Federal court in Western Virginia.

Reds Triumphant

At just about the time Mr. Joe Stalin's Russian Reds, by smart playing of the percentages, achieved mastery of the Eastern Baltic, Mr. Powell Crosley's cisatlantic Reds were achieving mastery of the National League. Unlike the Russian Reds, the Cincinnati Reds had to fight long and fiercely for what they got; indeed the season was within three days of its close before there was any mathematical certainty they would get it at all.

Next week, of course, the Reds must take the field against the New York Yankees, a club vastly superior to them in both defense and attack, which in the past three World Series has made a frightful shambles of the best opposition the National League could offer. Nevertheless, the savants who figure out such things have allowed the Reds one chance in three to vanquish the Yankees. That chance appears to be based on the mathematical possibility that the gifted Messrs. Walters and Derringer, who between them have won 52 ball games this year, can somehow manage to win four more.

Just twenty years ago today the Cincinnati Reds went into a World Series with the odds weighted heavily against them and nevertheless emerged champions. The circumstances, however, were peculiar, in fact unique. Several members of the Chicago White Sox, corrupted by gamblers, were striving frantically to throw the series away. In the end they succeeded, though it took eight games, so woefully were the Reds outclassed.

The scandal that followed shook the Nation as it has hardly been shaken before or since. Of all the tragic disillusionments that followed in the wake of the World War this was most tragic. By comparison the Teapot Dome business a few years later barely raised a ripple of indignation. A people already indulgent of profiteers, bootleggers, flappers and gangsters, were aghast with horror at the perfidy of the "Black Sox."

The Moscow Arrangements

Estonia has been made a Russian protectorate. Poland is wiped off the map, with the lion's share of its former territory annexed by Germany. The Nazi and Soviet governments have agreed to "consult each other as to necessary measures" in the event that Great Britain and France decide to continue their war against the Reich.

These are the first and major fruits of the Moscow conferences by which the two dictatorships hope to redraw the map of eastern Europe and, in the case of Germany at least, to terminate the war. There is still some mopping up to be done. The future of Lithuania and Latvia is left undecided and Rumanians can scarcely feel that the future of their country is very secure. But in its main outlines the objectives of the Nazi-Communist alliance are revealed. So are its weaknesses. The Russian-Estonian treaty is overshadowed by that partitioning Poland. But its importance is scarcely, if at all, inferior. By threat of overrunning the little Baltic state the U. S. S. R. has forced Estonia to lease it an unspecified number of naval and aviation bases along the south shore and at the entrance of the Gulf of Finland. Estonia is also forced to ally itself with Russia in resisting any attack on the latter country from the Baltic area. This clause, incidentally, is obviously directed against Germany.

Estonia, though allowed to preserve its "economic system" and "state organization," thus becomes a dependency of the Soviet Union. Its relation to Russia is very similar to that of Slovakia to Germany. In both cases outright annexation by the dominant partner would undoubtedly come if the protectorate should evince any tendency toward independent action.

Russia, for the first time since 1917, now re-emerges as a Baltic power, which means a western European power. And the westward push of the Soviet in this area more than offsets the contraction of what Russia was expected to seize in Poland.

Instead of coming as far west as the Vistula, as was foreshadowed, the new Russo-German frontier will in general follow the line of the Bug and San Rivers. It will therefore run from 150 to 300 miles east of the German border as it existed less than five weeks ago. What Germany has accomplished is to redraw her eastern border on a line which for the most part runs due south from the easternmost part of East Prussia. The Reich thus annexes more than half of Poland, bringing the major part of its resources and some 20,000,000 people under the swastika.

On the other hand, the new line of demarcation gives Russia and Hungary a joint frontier and cuts the Reich off from any direct access to Rumania. While Germany gets the coal of Poland, the oil resources of that unfortunate nation are seized by Russia. In other words, the Russian push to the west has balanced, if it has not overbalanced, the German "Drang nach Osten."

The gains apparently achieved by Germany will of course be advertised in that country to conceal the concessions which Germany has evidently made. But, in the final analysis, these concessions are likely to prove much more important than the gains.

In the first place, the Nazi annexation of all western and central Poland proves, if it needed proof, how little trust the German people can place in their Fuehrer's word.

Just a year ago this week Hitler told his people that the Sudeten area "is the last territorial demand I have to make in Europe." Just a year ago he disclaimed any intention of incorporating "people of other races than German" into the Reich. And it is only five months since he announced in the Reichstag that by intervening in Spain he had averted "Bolshevik destruction of European civilization." Germany assisted Gen. Franco, Hitler said, because "if the subhuman forces of Bolshevism had proved victorious in Spain, they might easily have spread across the whole of Europe."

There must be many in Germany who uneasily remember those assurances and who watch with apprehension the present westward spread, by Hitler's invitation, of Russia's "subhuman forces." Down the Baltic coast they come. Along a common frontier of 500 miles they face the new Germany. "Our mortal enemies," as Hitler called the Communists in "Mein Kampf," have lapped around Rumania to border Hungary and flank the German approach to southeast Europe. Was it for this end that the Condor Legion bombed the cities of "Marxist Spain?"

There is the most rigid censorship in Germany. But practically every German family has, and has had to read, "Mein Kampf." Its vitriolic denunciation of Russia and the Communists indicates the magnitude of the price which Hitler has paid in reviving Russian imperialism. Distorted as were his principles, the Fuehrer once seemed to his people to stand for certain ideals. On these he built his rapid rise to power. Now he has power, superficially, but everything for which he stood has been repudiated.

The Russian record is equally deceitful. But in the Communist gains there is less of the moral and material sacrifice which Hitler has been forced to make. "Fellow Travelers" everywhere are shocked by the working agreement with the Nazis. Yet Stalin has primarily compromised the Communists in other countries. Hitler, on the other hand, has compromised the National Socialists at home. And, for the consideration of the German people, he also has added a major war. This, so far, Stalin has avoided.

The German effort to involve Russia in war; the Russian effort to avoid that involvement, was the major drama in the Moscow negotiations. And the result is that Russia still remains free from definite entanglement, while Germany remains definitely at war.

If Great Britain and France continue to fight Germany, says the agreement, Berlin and Moscow "will consult each other as to necessary measures." That may mean much. But equally it may mean very little. Certainly it gives Germany no real assurance that Russian military aid will be forthcoming if the democracies refuse to accept a dictated peace.

The Soviet Union will, however, "deliver raw materials to Germany," in return for such industrial products as Germany may be able to spare. That also is an assurance which looks best at first glance. Its value depends on the extent to which Russia has any raw material surplus, and the extent to which such a surplus could be delivered, both involving large question marks.

It is "on the basis and in the spirit of the general political understanding reached between us" that the economic clauses of the Molotov-von Ribbentrop agreement are to become effective. One can imagine the sly gleam in the Commissar's eyes as he put his signature to that equivocal pledge. For no political understanding in history ever had less sincerity in its basis, and less honesty in its spirit, than that now reached between Nazi Germany and Communist Russia.

Outwardly strong but inwardly rotten; superficially impressive but fundamentally treacherous, the new Russo-German treaty does nothing to fulfill its claim of establishing "a secure foundation for permanent peace." It does nothing to establish such a foundation even as between Germany and Russia themselves.

The moral bottom of our universe had fallen through.

Loud and frenzied were the cries for punishment of the guilty, and for the taking of steps that would forever prevent the repetition of this ignominious chapter in American history. Under pressure of public anger the reforms were swiftly accomplished. Since then baseball has been ruled by a rigid, almost puritanical, ethic.

Many people have begun to suspect that there is something rather fishy about this war in Europe. Perhaps they are right. But you may be absolutely certain that the World Series will be on the up and up and that if the Reds win, this time their victory will be fully earned.

Prepared For It

Writing from Berlin, Joseph Barnes says that Germany's "defense economy" has become "war economy" without a break. That is one of the great advantages the Nazis have in the present conflict. To some extent it offsets the handicap of inadequate resources.

The German people, accustomed to a system of rationing in time of peace and subjected to an iron discipline which limits and directs all forms of economic activity, can be brought under still stricter discipline with comparative ease. While nations that have talked about preparedness are struggling to put their plans into effect and trying to secure cooperation from an untutored public, the Germans are apparently going ahead much as usual.

According to Mr. Barnes, the Nazi program calls for no revolutionary socialization of rights—that is, of such rights as the people still possess. But taxes will be higher, wages lower, hours longer, and prices fixed. This is a formula which at first sight appears to be conservative. Knowing, however, the extent to which the individual is subservient to the Nazi state and the way in which industry is geared to meet the demands of the state, there is no knowing how great may be the sacrifices exacted from the German civilian population should the war prove to be prolonged.

The ten-hour day has already been abolished, it is said, and wage reductions have gone into effect. This combination of lengthened hours and decreased wages at a time when the demand for labor is rapidly rising testifies eloquently to the power and comprehensiveness of the economic control system in force in Germany. Wartime demands ordinarily produce rising wages and bonuses for overtime work. When these normal trends can be reversed by decree, a good many problems of a wartime economy can be solved with comparative ease—needless to say at the expense of the working masses.

Letters To The Editor

"Straight Road"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is probably with good intentions that the Canadians are urging us to enter the war now. In the war itself, Canada naturally wants swift victory. Intentions, however, can be good and at the same time selfish, even un-Christian.

Thus I think The Post is to be congratulated on printing the "Canadian View." His words urging, as all good Canadians must, that we enter the war at once, convince us even more than our own logic that the role of the United States in this war is a role of peace.

Let us not doubt that Neil K. McKechnie, of Toronto, is sincere in saying, "Canadians, who feel as much akin to you as to the British Commonwealth, hope and pray that you will again take the straight road."

By the "straight road" is meant the road to war. What the Canadians overlook is that in this conflict the straight road for the United States leads to peace. No condemnation can be given for her view, but neither can falsity nor distortion be given our true position of isolation.

Canada is fighting for no other reason than to aid Britain, because the filial bonds with the mother country have never been broken. If Britain fights, it is perhaps Canada's duty to fight. That does not lead to the United States. If Canada fights, it is not our duty to fight. Our duty to our men and boys is to stay at peace.

Regardless of their forthrightness and sincerity, we see in Mr. McKechnie's words—in the words of all Canadians who urge us to participate in the war—the admission that Canada would never admit. The men and boys of the United States are urged to die on foreign battlefields in order that fewer men and boys of Canada will die there.

Perhaps America by fighting could shorten the duration of the war—any war. But America by fighting could not destroy the falsity of war.

In peace we can achieve a greater glory. Precedent must be set—a precedent of peace; we today hold the power to set the precedent.

A Question Of Means And Ends

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial of September 28, "Dissolving Communism," and the powerful cartoon on the same page, "In Hoc Signo," may well be studied by American youth. If the cartoon lacked anything it was the emblem of the hammer and sickle, which, in Poland, flies side by side with the Nazi swastika.

Communism has made its greatest appeal to the idealistic youth—the too impressionistic youth—of many nations. They have welcomed it on the basis of its claims that it fosters the fellowship of man throughout the world, that it protects and gives equal rights to the underprivileged, that it fights only special privilege as exemplified by the capitalist groups and governments.

There probably is not a sincere, genuine Communist in the United States who would not have gambled his life that the Russian government would never make a pact with Hitler. Yet the pact has been made, and its implications are daily becoming more evident to a watchful world. Implications of a vast, imperialistic program agreed upon by Stalin and Hitler to conquer if necessary and divide amongst themselves all the little nations of eastern Europe.

Thus, under the heels of two ruthless dictators, unless some miracle intervenes, will perish the rights, liberties and lives of thousands, possibly millions, of self-governing, self-respecting, people from the Baltic to the Black Sea. Communism and fascism are at

"Seem Impossible"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Though it takes two to make a quarrel, it takes only one to make a war as witness Poland. Most wars begin as invasions.

The situation in this country is by no means that of 1917, when we were forced into resistance to Germany because of the U-boat successes in piracy. Then a large fraction of our people were pro-German, as any man who did four-minute men work behind the lines then well knows. Today there is no pro-German sentiment; not one person in a hundred wishes Germany to destroy London and Paris.

But if the Communist hordes move in from Germany and from Russia and from Bulgaria to seize London and Paris and perhaps even Milan and Rome itself, the reaction in this land will be virtually unanimous. As the result of this common American sentiment, the one problem in the Congress today is how to avoid the necessity of ever sending another expeditionary force of millions overseas.

Everyone who knows Italy and the Italians knows that Mussolini can never get his people to aid the Communists; the Rome-Berlin Axis is done in. But if the Italians do join the French and British, then even Rome is not safe from being sacked and burned.

Stalin is now the most powerful man on earth. He has taken in Hitler and blockaded him from the Mediterranean; that is, unless Hitler goes the entire route into paganism and communism. And should the two, as they now threaten conquer Europe, two great fleets will be made ready against our shores.

Does this seem impossible? So did the outbreak of this second and greater World War seem impossible.

WILLIAM E. CHANCELLOR.

"Menacing Fate"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As a militant Socialist, I hailed with delight the Russian revolution and the establishment of what we fondly hoped would be a true workers' republic. I condoned not only the setting up of a dictatorship (not of the proletariat but over them and all others), but also the total obrogation of political rights for the overwhelming majority. I even abstained from condemning severely the harsh treatment of all opponents by the Russian Communist minority.

I were not so assured that these were necessary phases in the upbuilding of true communism; that they would soon pass away? Time marched on and I became skeptical, their beautiful constitution existed only on paper; the vile purges in quickstep, with political democracy only a mockery, it was seen that their vaunted economic democracy was only a sham—militaristic state socialism at the best reckoning.

And then, after long and vociferous denunciations of Nazism and subtle appeals for a united front against it, came the infamous "peace pact" with Hitler and the resultant rape of Poland by two ruthless robbers. "Peace, it is wonderful" as the lion said to the lamb. Let it not be overlooked that a similar fate is menacing most of continental Europe outside of the robbers' dens.

Communism, Fascism, Nazism—pay your money and take your choice! HARRY R. LEE.
Washington, Sept. 25.

"Straight Road"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am an ordinary John Doe citizen of the U. S. A., diligently striving to maintain a judicial attitude and keep from being mentally smothered by the current avalanche of war propaganda. I have been assuming that every quarrel has at least two sides, but am now being vehemently advised that this old-fashioned axiom does not apply to the war in Europe.

I have no ax to grind; am neither pro this nor pro that. I hold no brief for Adolf Hitler; have no desire to whitewash him. But I am a bit startled to find that when Hitler says that two and two make four, I must disagree if I am to be in accord with popular American opinion.

I do not go along with Hitler's Jewish program or with the taking over of Bohemia and Moravia, but the bringing together of the German-speaking peoples of Austria, Memel and Sudetenland, if I recall history aright, is what is ordinarily called a statesmanlike performance and was accomplished with less turmoil than is usually the case.

What may I ask, is wrong with the following analogy: Let us assume that 20 years ago, after a hard war between Canada and the United States (no matter who was wrong) this country was defeated. Suppose that Canada took from us Alaska, Hawaii, the Canal Zone and Puerto Rico, chopped off a piece of California, and cut a corridor down through New England to Boston to secure a southern seaport; that we were subjected to other indignities to our national spirit, and were sick, exhausted and discouraged; that we cried for relief, but got none.

That there was division of opinion and unemployment and discontent throughout the land; that a paperhanger from Arkansas appeared with a plan to get back the property that had been taken from us; that he stilled all objection by force, eliminated unemployment, and by bluff and trickery practiced on our enemies got back much of the lost domain, and by his army occupied the New England corridor and Boston. Would the American people denounce this man as a liar and a devil?

Will some good reader who disagrees put aside his emotion and inform me in restrained language wherein the thought suggested by this analogy is substantially in error. SEARCHER FOR TRUTH.

"Menacing Fate"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As a militant Socialist, I hailed with delight the Russian revolution and the establishment of what we fondly hoped would be a true workers' republic. I condoned not only the setting up of a dictatorship (not of the proletariat but over them and all others), but also the total obrogation of political rights for the overwhelming majority. I even abstained from condemning severely the harsh treatment of all opponents by the Russian Communist minority.

I were not so assured that these were necessary phases in the upbuilding of true communism; that they would soon pass away? Time marched on and I became skeptical, their beautiful constitution existed only on paper; the vile purges in quickstep, with political democracy only a mockery, it was seen that their vaunted economic democracy was only a sham—militaristic state socialism at the best reckoning.

And then, after long and vociferous denunciations of Nazism and subtle appeals for a united front against it, came the infamous "peace pact" with Hitler and the resultant rape of Poland by two ruthless robbers. "Peace, it is wonderful" as the lion said to the lamb. Let it not be overlooked that a similar fate is menacing most of continental Europe outside of the robbers' dens.

Communism, Fascism, Nazism—pay your money and take your choice! HARRY R. LEE.

The Post Impressionist

For Art's Sake

SIR NEVILLE HENDERSON, in his report on conversations and events leading up to the European war, says Hitler denies that he is a warmonger at heart, but rather a simple, peace-loving artist who has been thwarted in the expression of his genius. Let us hope that his aesthetic impulses will get the better of him. For, in looking back over the pages of history, it is plain to see that despotism demands a single-purpose mind and permits of no diversions or hobbies. When a ruler yearns to supplement his crown of gold with one of laurel, the reins of government are apt to slip from his fingers.

Hitler may or may not have painted very creditably with his water colors during the pre-war-putsch, but there is little doubt that the world would be a better place today if he had stayed with his brushes.

Although there seems to be little similarity between the two rulers, let us remember what happened some 3,000 years ago in Egypt, when the reigning Pharaoh neglected the affairs of state in order to establish a new religion, with concurrently new arts and letters.

Ikhnot was the first to conceive the idea of one universal god, and he dedicated his entire reign to this strange new doctrine. He was determined to wipe every trace of pantheism from the land, and abandoned Thebes, the old capital, with its magnificent temples and elaborate system of priesthood, moving the seat of government to a new city, which he had built in honor of the one god—Aton, the sun. There he fostered a civilization which was far ahead of his times—one which was forgotten soon after his death and brought to light by archeologists early in the present century.

Inscribed upon the walls of the chapel-tombs of the City of Amarna, the antiquarian may read Ikhnot's glorious hymns to the sun, some of which rank with the psalms of David in their sublimity.

Thy dawning, O Living Aton, is beautiful on the horizon . . . O Beginning of Life, Thou art all, and Thy rays encompass all . . . When Thou wast alone didst Thou create man and beast, both large and small; all that go upon their feet, all that fly on wings; yea, all the foreign lands, even Syria and Kush besides this land of Egypt. Thou settest 'll in their place, and providest all with their needs . . .

Thus Pharaoh wrote poetry that outlasted his empire, too deeply engrained in Egyptian life to be pleased for help that were dispatched by his stricken provinces; for Syria was being conquered by the Hittites and the southernmost boundaries were overrun by the Hebrews, and all Egypt was demoralized by a religious revolution which was beyond the comprehension of the people.

NERO, whose light burst upon the ancient world fourteen centuries later, could not place the blame for his downfall upon a noble motive. After the first five years of his reign, the "quinquennium Neronis," during which he acquitted himself with credit, he became convinced that the mantle of Apollo had fallen to his shoulders. Some say that he possessed a fair tenor voice, but in Rome it was necessary to hire audiences to applaud him.

Later, he visited Greece and appeared in the traditional Greek theater, where he implored the judges to be impartial in their opinions. But they were a cagey lot, those judges, and everywhere he sang, Nero met with enthusiastic ovations, winning every contest with astonishing regularity.

He declared that the Greeks were the only ones worthy of listening to him, and he rewarded his appreciative hosts with all manner of imperial benefits, granting them the Roman franchise and the same immunity from taxation. Thus the Greeks became the unique possessors of representation without taxation.

Hitler, in turning aside from his art, followed to a certain extent the example set by Frederick the Great. With the latter, however, it was not a matter of choice, but one of necessity occasioned by parental discipline. Frederick William was a practical man with an absolute horror of the so-called "frills" of civilization, and it is said that he even struck off Latin from his son's courses of study, considering it too frivolous a subject for the future King of Prussia.

After a most unpleasant confinement in a regal sort of concentration camp, young Frederick was disinclined to risk his father's displeasure again even if it meant neglecting his beloved French culture for more princely activities. However, during the years before his accession, he was made to write a great deal of bad poetry and excellent prose.

But after he became King, state affairs required more and more time, and as he became proficient with sword and scepter he became less able with his pen. Like Hitler, he had the doubtful honor of being dubbed the "Madman of Europe," and probably voiced his successor's desire when he wrote, "I have been tormented by the thought of seeing my name in the papers and in the archives of history."

With many peace plans, some practical and some impractical, afloat in the land, perhaps some patron of the arts who is also a lover of humanity will by some means acquire an early Hitler. He could publish prints and scatter them throughout the nations so that men could acclaim the genius of the painter and thus win the war lord back to his brushes. The idea worked with Nero; and the nature of a great event is such the same today.

Vote League Plans Survey Of Welfare

Opening Meeting of Board Held at Home Of Mrs. Ryan; Child Labor Study Agreed On

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

Surveys important to child welfare and economic welfare in the District will be undertaken this season by the D. C. Voteless League of Women Voters, it was announced yesterday at the opening board meeting called by Mrs. Max O. Lorenz, who succeeds Mrs. Louis Ottenberg as president. The meeting was held at the home of Mrs. Franklin Ryan, corresponding secretary, at the Brookmoor.

Mrs. Paul Appleby, the league's newly appointed chairman of government and child welfare, outlined plans for co-operating in the program of the national league in this department by watching child labor legislation and any changes in social security which would affect children of the District.

A study will also be made in the mid-city area here, where health, housing and economic conditions seriously affect the welfare of children, to determine needs in the field of health, recreation and guidance. Field trips will be made and data which has already been assembled will be classified.

Mrs. Chester Williams, newly appointed chairman of government and economic welfare, will conduct, through members of her department, a study of relief in the District. The project will extend the survey made last year, to consideration of the relative merits of work relief, the dole, selling or giving surplus commodities, and also establishment of standards for relief.

Seek Changes In Tenant Court

The problem of the youth between 16 and 18, out of school and out of jobs, will also be investigated and an attempt made to change the procedure in the Landlord-Tenant Court, which is now said to work a hardship on the tenant in many cases.

The league expects to continue having a representative on the milk committee, endeavoring to work out a measure more satisfactory than the Shute bill; to continue its support of an unemployment compensation board operating under the supervision of the Social Security Board and to favor the liberalizing of benefits and shortening the time of waiting for them under the unemployment compensation act.

Mrs. Allen Moore, who is serving again as chairman of Government and education, announced her department would co-operate with the national league in a study of Federal aid for education with a view to taking a stand on it in December. Locally, the league will support efforts to secure sufficient and scientifically allocated funds for education, study the needs for vocational, educational and social guidance; continue to urge an autonomous Board of Education and a better set-up for handicapped children, seeking two schools for them, one located near the Children's Hospital and the other near Freedmen's Hospital.

The department of government and foreign policy under its new chairman, Mrs. C. S. Duncan, will follow the European situation month by month and commence its study with a discussion of national defense and where the responsibility for it lies.

Mrs. Edward Harding, chairman of the committee on student education, announced there is a large group of student members of the league at American University and that another is to be formed at Cathedral School.

Old Battles Will Continue

The department of government and the legal status of women under the chairmanship of Mrs. Pearl B. Klein, will continue to work for a new home for the Woman's Bureau of the Police Department, a project it has supported ever since investigating the need.

The only department chairmanship unfilled is that of government and its operation, for which a new head is still to be appointed by Mrs. Lorenz. New standing committee chairmen include Finance, Mrs. Frederick Gutheim, publicity, Mrs. F. A. Stalen; membership, Mrs. Harold Krogh; student education, Mrs. Harding; arrangements for meetings, Mrs. Dean Snyder, editor of the Newsletter, Mrs. Donald Blaisdell.

Other board members beside those mentioned are Mrs. Robert Leonard, first vice president; Mrs. Charles Weston, second vice president; Mrs. Benjamin McKelway, recording secretary; Mrs. Edna Johnston, treasurer; Mrs. William Kittle, Miss Belle Sherwin, Mrs. Arthur Altmeyer and Miss Edith Rockwood, directors; Mrs. Allen Moore, chairman of the department of government and education; Mrs. Pearl B. Klein, department of government and legal status of women; Mrs. Henry Chalmers, chairman of league orientation; and Mrs. Joseph Low, department of government and legislation.

Columbian Women to Meet

The Columbian Women of George Washington University will have their first meeting of the season Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 P. M. at 4 o'clock.

Miss Margaret Pepper, the new president, has a new plan this year to raise money for the scholarship fund maintained by the organization. Instead of sponsoring one large money-making affair, the membership will be divided into groups, headed by a captain, and each member will either give an individual donation or raise money by card parties.

There is a growing need for scholarship at the university and the Columbian Women aim to increase the number of students to whom they give assistance. The bridge section of the group will meet October 18 with Miss Elizabeth Peet at Gallaudet College. Miss Pepper entertained the board September 31 at her home, 1734 R street.

The new officers for the year are Miss Pepper, president; Mrs. Russell McNitt, first vice president; Miss Alice Hutchins Drake, second vice president; Miss Helen Gantley, recording secretary; Mrs. DeWitt Bennett, corresponding secretary; Miss Elizabeth Middle, assistant corresponding secretary; Mrs. Thomas B. Brown, treasurer, and Miss Sarah Lerch, historian.

The chairmen of the standing committees this year are: Miss Katherine Scrivener, program; Miss Agnes Garrels, scholarship; Mrs. Charles R. Neaser and Mrs. Wolfram K. Legner, house; Mrs. Russell Shelk, hospitality; Miss Emma A. Buechele, publicity; Mrs. Robert Griggs, finance; and Miss Harriet Garrels, university relations.

Local Sisterhood Completing Plans For Conference

The local Sisterhood of the Washington Hebrew Congregation is completing plans for the forthcoming conference of District 8, to be held here October 10, 11 and 12.

The conference will open with a joint banquet to be held concurrently of the Midatlantic States section of the Council of Jewish Women at the Mayflower Hotel October 10.

The executive board will meet Wednesday morning, followed by an open meeting. In the afternoon and evening there will be social affairs and the final business meeting will be held Thursday morning. Mrs. Morris Cafritz of this city is the District president.

Shakespeare Society to Meet

The Shakespeare Society of Washington will open its twenty-third season, October 8, with the presentation of "The Merry Wives of Windsor." The play will be given by the Players Club of Central Community Center directed by Kent Dyer, J. Edmund Veitch and Alice Louise Hunter. This will be the society's 270th regular program of lectures and dramatic activities dealing with the customs, politics and literature of the Elizabethan era.

Plans for this year differ somewhat from those of the last few seasons. Four of the eight monthly programs will consist of lectures followed by costumed scenes. One evening will be devoted to a general discussion by members of the question, "Why Study Shakespeare or Maintain a Shakespeare Society?" The three remaining programs will be occupied by the production of full plays, the first to be given on the opening night. The offering on February 12 is to be "Macbeth," by the cast of players who gave several Shakespearean productions at the Glen Echo Playhouse and will be under the direction of Forney Reese. On April 8, the dramatic department of Roosevelt High School, under the direction of Miss Esther Galbraith, will present the "Taming of the Shrew," the annual production of her dramatic class. Mrs. Ruth Dane, of Woodrow Wilson High School, will present costumed scenes on November 13 and May 13, and on March 11 she will discuss the blood relationship between the persons involved in the history plays of Shakespeare, based on genealogical research.

Mrs. Thompson Finds London Gay in War

Mother of U. S. Counselor's Wife
Returns to Capital After 6-Week Visit
In Ottawa; Tells of Drills in Streets

By Carolyn Bell

BACK FROM A six-week visit in Ottawa where she was the guest of the Counselor of the United States Legation in Canada, and Mrs. John Farr Simmons—her son-in-law and daughter—Mrs. Huston Thompson carries with her some indelible impressions of a country at war.

Mrs. Thompson also brings a pleasant bit of gossip. The Simmons are welcoming a new addition to their household. Huston Thompson Simmons, just three weeks old. The former Caroline Huston Thompson and her diplomat husband have another son 2 years old.

Pre-war Ottawa was most gay according to Mrs. Thompson. Four cocktail parties in one afternoon was not considered unusual. But, of course, now all official functions, as well as most of those of an impromptu nature, have ceased.

Attending the special session of Parliament, when war was declared, Mrs. Thompson was particularly intrigued by the clothes worn for the occasion. Lady Tweedsmuir set the fashion with a semi-evening gown and no hat. Although it was only 2 o'clock in the afternoon all the gentlemen were in their "white tie and tails." This being a special session the ladies did not don their feathers (such as they wear when being presented at Court) as they do for the regular opening of Parliament in January.

THE STREETS OF OTTAWA are filled with young boys being drilled. Adding a picturesque note to the grim scene are the Canadian Highlanders in their colorful kilts who drill the lads. Through the day there is the sound of the bagpipe, fife and drum.

Mr. and Mrs. Simmons have a lovely gabled house—reminiscent of those in the Stratford section of England. The huge garden, in the rear of the house, runs down to the Rideau River. Caroline, much to her mother's amazement, has taken to gardening with a vengeance. The house faces a large park about one block square.

Their "next door neighbor" is Lady Borden, widow of Sir Robert Borden, Canada's Prime Minister during the last war. She owns a spacious estate.

With a group of young married women, Mrs. Simmons has been studying the co-operative movement—so popular in Canada at the present time. Collecting old books to send into the rural sections also keeps the young matrons busy.

ALONG THE DIPLOMATIC FRONT: Work continues to pile up at the embassies and legations whose countries are at war. A number of Frenchmen recently arrived on these shores to take over the excess work.

Latest newcomer is Capt. Maurice Boyer, who is accompanied by his son, Jean Percival Boyer. Because the work is "emergency," so to speak, the diplomats have been arriving here sans titles. After several days Capt. Boyer, who is in the Military Attache's office, has been named interpreter—a title rather new to Washington.

Whether Capt. Boyer is any relation to his better known countryman, Charles Boyer (who is reported in the front fighting for France), was not disclosed.

The new Secretary of the Portuguese Legation, Dr. Joao Rodrigues Affra, with Mrs. Affra, has arrived in Washington to take up his new duties, and they have taken an apartment at Wardman Park Hotel, where the legation is located.

Miss Mary Walter To Become Bride Of Frank Temple

Mrs. Albert Good, of Charleston, W. Va., will serve as matron of honor for her sister, and Miss Genevieve Baugh will be bridesmaid. Harry D. Temple will serve as best man for his brother, and two other brothers, John and Frederick Temple, will be ushers. A luncheon at Normandie Farms for about 30 guests will follow the ceremony. After a honeymoon in the Blue Ridge Mountains, the couple will make their home on Otis Place.

Mr. Walter will give his daughter in marriage.

Gloria Gudger Plans Studies

Miss Gloria Gudger, daughter of Capt. and Mrs. Emmet C. Gudger, who has been visiting her uncle, Thomas Walsh, of Washington, will study at the Baldwin School, near Philadelphia, this winter. Her elder sister, Miss Elinor Gudger, a post-deb, has returned to her studies at Mount Holyoke College, at South Hadley, Mass., after serving as a photographer's model in New York this summer.

Capt. Gudger has left the hospital where he was convalescing from an illness and has joined his wife in Montana, where she has been visiting friends. He was ordered several months ago to Honolulu, but illness prevented him from assuming his duties.

Mrs. Gudger is the daughter of the late Senator Thomas W. Walsh, of Montana.

Miss Janet Watt Is Betrothed to Neil Finch Miller

Mr. and Mrs. Robert J. Watt, of 1421 Massachusetts avenue, announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Janet Watt, to Neil Finch Miller. Mr. Watt is the American delegate to the International Labor Office in Geneva. Miss Watt is a graduate of Mount Holyoke College and Mr. Miller, an alumnus of Amherst, is with the National Youth Administration.

Baroness Korff Reopens Home

Baroness Serge Korff has returned from a summer at The Cedars, in West Chop, on Martha's Vineyard, and has reopened her home on Foxhall road. She has staying with her for the week-end her daughter, Miss Barbara Korff, who for the last few years has been making her home in New York.

Baroness Korff and her daughter originally planned a trip to Europe late in the summer, but canceled their plans because of the ominous situation. Miss Korff, who is artistically inclined, resumed her painting this summer and will study the subject further in New York this winter. She has an attractive apartment in Manhattan, and for the last two years has been working in a shop there.

Her sister-in-law, Baroness Serge Korff, the former Miss Alice Graeme, of Washington, has been spending a few days in the Capital, but will return today to Swarthmore, where her husband is associated with the college of that name. She and Baron Korff will go to Lenox, Mass., for the wedding, October 14, of Miss Olivia Stokes to John Davis Hatch, Jr.

Miss Stokes, the daughter of Canon and Mrs. Anson Phelps Stokes, will have as her maid of honor Miss Audrey Maynard, of New York. The couple, whose engagement was announced in August, have not yet decided where they will make their home. The ceremony will take place at Brook Farm, the Stokes' summer place, which is located on an estate called Shadowbrook, created in 1890 by the bride-elect's grandfather, Anson Phelps Stokes, of New York.

Son, Wife to Visit Carol B. Merriams

Mr. and Mrs. John E. Merriam, of Topeka, Kans., will arrive today to visit the former's parents, the chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and Mrs. Carroll B. Merriam, in their apartment at the Shoreham.

Mr. and Mrs. Merriam will give a small dinner tonight for their son and daughter-in-law at the opening of the fall season in the Blue Room of the Shoreham.

Harl Cooks Stop With Miss Umben

Mr. and Mrs. Harl Cook are spending the week-end in Washington as guests of Miss Marcia Umben in her apartment at 3226 N street. They are en route to Provincetown, Mass., where they will be having married leisurely across the continent from Santa Barbara, Calif., where they spent the summer. Mrs. Cook used to live there.

Mrs. Cook, a stunning redhead, is a talented sculptress. Her husband is a stepson of Susan Glaspell, the novelist, and writes for magazines.

The Larrabees Are Guests of John Schiffs

Warrenton Couple Will Be Honored Tonight at Dinner

Capt. and Mrs. Sterling Larrabee, of Warrenton, who are visiting Mr. and Mrs. John M. Schiff at their place on Long Island, will be guests of honor at a dinner their hosts will give tonight before the ball which will climax the thirty-seventh annual society and sporting classic, the Piping Rock Horse Show. Capt. Larrabee, who is M. F. H. of the Piedmont hounds, is serving as one of the judges.

Also among the hostesses at dinner will be Countess Leonardo Vitelli, daughter of William Robertson Coe, of Oyster Bay, Long Island, and wife of the Italian diplomat. She recently arrived in this country for a stay.

Countess Vitelli, who is the godchild of Mrs. Lawrence Townsend, of Washington, and a frequent visitor here, was among those who attended the gala opening on Wednesday evening of the Hamilton Hotel in New York. She was a guest of Miss Marion Oates.

There were many Washingtonians or others well known here, in the smart gathering at the opening. Including Mr. and Mrs. William Rhinelandt Stewart, who were the guests of Mr. Margaret Emerson, and Mrs. John R. McLean, who, with Mr. and Mrs. Byron C. Foy, were at the table of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Reeves, whose marriage took place recently in Bermuda.

Dr. and Mrs. Edward S. Cowles had in their party the former's daughter, Mrs. William Reed, of Washington, and Mr. Reed. Mr. and Mrs. Reed recently moved from Chicago to Jericho, Long Island, where they have a guest house on the estate of Mr. and Mrs. James Alley.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter F. Dillingham, of Honolulu, who frequently visit in Washington, also turned out for the opening.

Mr. and Mrs. George Tillman Bell will entertain at tea this afternoon in honor of their son and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. G. T. Bell, Jr., who were married September 22 in Christ Church, New York, and will arrive in Washington this morning.

The party will take place from 4 to 6 o'clock at the Bell home at 2718 Thirtieth street. This is the house that has been leased for the winter by the Naval Attache of the Italian Embassy and the Marchioness of Sant'Orsola, who will move in next week.

Social Set Attends Night Club Opening

Washington's newest night club, the Club Lafayette, located in the hotel of that name, opened last evening with a prominent gathering which included members of the official set and residents.

Among those who occupied tables in the club, which has been decorated in the formal, French style, with rust, pale green and silver reflected in the mirrors which line the walls, were Senator John Overton and his daughter, Miss Ruth Overton; Senator Elmer Thomas, Representative Claude V. Parsons, Representative and Mrs. Dewey Short, Dr. and Mrs. Robert E. Moran, William McEvoy, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. Hilleary Hoskinson, Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Romney, William E. Arthur, Col. H. B. Hackett and Col. Charles W. Curwood, of New York, and Capt. Dean Smith and Charles Franz, of St. Louis.

Jeff Ford, president of the Lafayette Club, and E. A. Hodges, acted as hosts at the opening.

Mrs. Cook, a stunning redhead, is a talented sculptress. Her husband is a stepson of Susan Glaspell, the novelist, and writes for magazines.

The Hunt Country

By Nina Carter Tabb

THE FAUQUIER-LOUDBON Polo Club sent a team to White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., to play match games this afternoon and tomorrow with the 110th Field Artillery Polo Club, of Baltimore. The teams are stopping at the Greenbrier Hotel for the week-end, and the management will present the winners with handsome antique silver julep cups.

The polo field at White Sulphur is one of the best in the country, situated in a valley, with beautiful mountains in the background. There is always an interested crowd of spectators on the sidelines, and the players are winned and dined royally.

THE LINE-UP for the Fauquier-Loudoun team will be Capt. Richard Kirkpatrick, of Warrenton, Robert Vanderpool, Clark, of Middleburg; Hubert Phipps, of Rectortown; Charles V. B. Cushman, of Upperville, and Harris Bucklin, of Marshall, who is going as a substitute. Playing for the Artillery team will be Maj. Amos Koonz, Capt. George Foote, Capt. John Brooks and Lieut. John Patrick.

Next week-end the local team will play one from the War Department at the Potomac Park field, Washington. Nowhere else in the world do people have the chance to see such high-class polo absolutely free of charge. Exciting games have been held there every week this summer, and many drive in from Virginia and Maryland to watch them.

The Fauquier-Loudoun Polo Club will wind up the season with their last match games the week-end of October 15, when they will play the 110th Field Artillery team on Phipps Goose Creek Field, near Upperville. Much entertaining will be done in honor of the visitors.

Mrs. Robert Vanderpool Clark is home again from Emergency Hospital, where she stayed for several days after being wounded when a gun went off accidentally while she was moving some furniture. She is now settled in her new home near Atoka, which Mr. Clark recently purchased from Raymond Guest. Her friends who have been calling on her were relieved to find that her beauty has not been marred by the accident.

MISS MARY RUMSEY has arrived from Long Island to open her estate near Middleburg. Like her mother, the late Mrs. Charles C. Rumsey, she is an excellent horsewoman and an ardent follower to hounds. She lives in the territory of the Orange County Hunt, but is a member of Piedmont and Middleburg hunts and goes out with all three packs. Her grandfather, the late E. A. Harrison, was a member of the Orange County Hunt.

Hurleys Lease McCauley Home For Winter

Will Move From Belmont, Estate Near Leesburg, Va.

Mr. and Mrs. Patrick J. Hurley, who spent most of the summer at their estate, "Belmont," near Leesburg, will come to Washington next week to spend the winter and have taken the home of Comdr. and Mrs. William D. Thomas, the McCauley house, at 3508 Prospect avenue.

A debutante daughter is the reason Mr. and Mrs. Hurley are deserting their beautiful Virginia home, with its rolling green lawns and acres. Miss Patricia Hurley made her bow to society at a large reception given there on a sunny Saturday afternoon early last summer. Her parents will give a dance for her sometime this winter.

The home of Comdr. and Mrs. Thomas, which is one of the oldest in Georgetown, is admirably suited for entertaining, with its long drawing room, an amusingly decorated bar and sitting room in the basement, and a lawn looking out over the Potomac and equipped with floodlights which give the impression of moonlight.

Mr. Hurley is former Secretary of War. He and Mrs. Hurley have leased the Thomas house for six months.

Vom Rath Girls To Serve Bride

The Misses Cecilia and Marie von Rath, charming sisters who are well-known in Capital society, will be bridesmaids at the wedding of Miss Margaret I. Rives, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. Bayard Rives, of New York and Katonah, N. Y., to Laurence P. Rand, the nephew, in the Episcopal Church of the Epiphany, in New York, the Rev. John W. Suter officiating, assisted by the Rev. Endicott Peabody, headmaster of Groton School.

Mrs. Anthony A. Bliss and Miss Mildred M. Godwin will be matron and maid of honor, and the other bridesmaids are the Misses Cynthia Forbes, of Boston; Jane Miller, Letitia Jones, Sybil K. Williams, Elizabeth Godwin and Grace Sloane.

Wyllis Terry, Jr., will be best man for Mr. Rand, who is the son of Mrs. Laurence B. Rand, of New York. A reception at the Colony Club will follow the ceremony.

Lippmanns Return

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Lippmann have returned to the Capital and are again at their home at 1525 Thirtieth street.

Your Figure Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain

Walking Affords Beneficial Exercise For 150 Muscles

THE AVERAGE woman pays a high price for failure to get the outdoor exercise she needs. She grows soft, dumpy and middle aged, not because she is middle aged, but because she has settled down to a sedentary life devoid of vigorous and exhilarating outdoor sports. She lacks the muscle tone for the spirited posture and firm figure of youth.

Now that autumn is here, take advantage of the cool, brisk weather. And don't let me hear an excuse out of you! What if you can't ride horseback, or play tennis, or this and that! The very least you can do is get out and walk, and while walking may not be very exciting, it sets 150 muscles in motion—with special stress on those of the chest, abdomen, hips, thighs and legs—and it stirs up your circulation.

Those are good reasons why this might well be your main outdoor activity. If so, you should spend an hour a day at it, all at one time, to allow the blood to get into the muscles. That's so it will be easier for you to relax later! And, if you watch your step, you will be able to walk away with a good figure!

Stretch With Entire Body

Stretch up, every step you take. That doesn't mean "head up," "chin level," or "shoulders back." When you check up on yourself so meticulously, a rigid posture is the result and that is not what you want. Just stretch up with your entire body and those details will take care of themselves.

This upward stretch should begin with the lower abdominal wall, which should be constantly galled up, making the lower part of the abdomen flat. The upward pull should extend on up through the chest and the top of the head. Incidentally, if you are stretched to your utmost height, there will be a slight tuck-under of the hips. Make a point of swinging the legs from the hips—without wobbling—and point the toes straight ahead.

The little habit of stretching up is very slimming for the waistline. But walking on the level doesn't do much for the hips. Try to include a hill in your walk so as to use the gluteal muscles and reduce the fat pads on the backs of the hips. An upgrade that raises the leg to a 45-degree angle with the trunk is the most slimming.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Is Man to Be Trusted Who Courts Girl When Not Yet Divorced From His Wife, Whom He Reviles?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am coming to you for advice on a problem that concerns my roommate. The situation is this—she is going with a young man 24 years old, who is married but says he is planning to get a divorce. He has been separated from his wife, who lives in New York, and he blames all their trouble on her. He says he is not the father of her second child (they have two children), and this seems a rather unethical statement for a man to make about his wife, to a girl he has known less than two months.

He has said other things about his wife that one cannot imagine a gentleman saying about the mother of his children (or child) and altogether I don't think that this girl, to whom I am devoted, should get mixed up in such a mess. She is just 20 and says she doesn't know whether she is in love with him, but she does miss him when she doesn't see him every day or two.

Other friends of hers agree with me that she should keep him at a distance, at least until he has shed his responsibilities to his wife, and that, until such time, he has no right to speak of marriage to another girl. But she pays no attention to us and seems to think she knows what she is doing. Her parents do not know she is going with a married man and she admits they would not approve, if they knew. I am hoping your advice will keep her from making a serious mistake. Sincerely, M. D.

Man Who Disparages Wife, Damns Himself

DEAR M. D.: It is idle to advise those who are not in a mood for advice—as, obviously, your roommate is not. The fact that I might consider her association with a loose-tongued married man risky business probably wouldn't stay her from playing with fire, even though her own intuition corroborated my belief that she was treading on dangerous ground.

At her present stage of infatuation, your friend is as fascinated by her emotionally experienced suitor as the moth is fascinated by the flame. And I venture to say that she will not be ready to listen to, or to act by, reason until her fingers have been burned or until the tense attraction has worn itself out.

However, it seems to me that none could read your letter and fail to agree completely with your estimate of the man, as a low-bred person of shoddy character. As you surmise, a gentleman—which is to say, a man of fine feelings who lives by admirable ethics—does not make scurrilous allegations against his wife (or the mother of his child—or children) to anyone, regardless of what her shortcomings may be.

The sort of man who takes revenge upon an unsatisfactory wife by tearing her reputation to shreds is piling up damning evidence against himself with every scurrilous word he utters. It has been my observation that the person who is loose in speech usually is correspondingly loose in other aspects of his behavior. I have observed, furthermore, that the man who broadcasts damaging statements about one woman with whom he has been intimately associated, is a man who has a persistently low estimate of women in general—an estimate which stems, I think, from his inability to negotiate a wholesome social relationship with any member of the so-called fair sex.

The person who consistently blames others for his own reversals or failures to achieve is a person to be distrusted. The case history of any such person almost invariably shows that he is repetitiously involved in one special kind of trouble—financial or professional, or emotional, etc.—which should be sufficient evidence that the seeds of catastrophe are within himself, and that his upsets are not to be attributed to fate, or to the treachery of others whom he professes to have trusted.

Thus, while your roommate is (seemingly) riding high in this man's favor today, the chances are 100 to 1 that if she were to become his wife she would find herself at some future day as much the object of his venomous criticism as his present wife is at the moment. There is, of course, the chance in 100 implied above that he might make a good husband for the girl who knew how to handle him, but if he should develop into a faithful, devoted husband of a second wife, it would be something of a miracle. It is certainly not to be counted on. M.H.

Should Man Be Told Of Wife's Affair?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My husband and I live in a Washington suburb. We have become acquainted with a couple in the neighborhood, since my husband works in the same office with the man. We have grown to like them very much and see them socially at least once a week. . . . However, both my husband and I are fond of the man (and of the woman, for somehow she never has seemed as much of a person as her husband. Although she is friendly and jolly, her tastes and standards just don't come up to his.

Recently, I have learned that the woman has an admirer, behind her husband's back. This is not mere gossip, as she has virtually told me so herself. What I want to know is this—as a friend of the man, should I tell him his wife is being unfaithful? Or should I continue, as I have the past few weeks, to keep this knowledge to myself? The woman is a 4-year-old child, and as things are now, it would not surprise me if the woman deserted her husband for the other man.

By telling the husband now—when he may still be able to persuade her to give up the man for the child's sake—I may be able to prevent an elopement. Sometimes I think the affair is none of my business; but then again, I don't know. What is your advice? PERPLEXED BYSTANDER.

Taste and Judgment Prohibit Tale Bearing

DEAR P. B.: I suspect your lack of sympathy for the wife is somewhat responsible for your eager desire to play the role of busybody in this instance. In my opinion, good taste and good judgment both argue against tale-bearing, particularly against the kind of tale you think of carrying here. Since the wife has partially confided in you and has found, no doubt, an encouraging ear, it seems to me that you are doubly obliged to hold your tongue, so far as her husband is concerned.

If you feel conscience driven to offer advice, speak directly to the wife. And if you lack the courage to counsel her, on the basis of what she has admitted and what you have observed, then I think you had best keep hands off altogether. It is just possible that her husband knows her shortcomings rather better than you suppose; that her flirtatiousness is an old story to him; and that he continues, with poker face, to hope for the best while being prepared for the worst.

Why don't you get your husband's opinion as to what is best to do? He has a right to a voice in your decision, since his business relationship with the man would be unavoidably affected by any intrusion of yours—however well meant—into the latter's personal affairs. M.H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Washington Post.

Revived From 1900 Album

Pictured above is one of the modern "revivals," snatched from the past and featured at a local fashion showing yesterday. It makes use of black bengaline—that old-fashioned fabric that made good this year. It is wasp-waisted with back fullness and one of those simple round necklines made for displaying bright silver or gold jewelry. That veiled, bird-perching sailor is also reminiscent of fashions worn a decade ago.

3 Dress Eras Traced in Show Of 1940 Styles

Garb of Other Days Supplies Inspiration For Current Clothes

By Marshall Adams, The Post Fashion Editor

THREE ERAS belonging to America's past—those of mother, grandmother and great-grandmother, supply inspiration for present day styles. A fashion promenade, sponsored by a local store Thursday, presented authentic looking gowns from grandmother's day, dating back to the Civil War. Then came gowns and Marshall Adams hooped frocks which will lead streamlined cotillions this fall. A pink net, bouffant and zraided in shimmering silver, and a rose satin, hooped and trimmed in foaming ruffles, were modern party gowns shown which dated almost 100 years for authenticity.

The 1890 era when grandmother bustled all over herself was presented next. The original back bustling costume comprised a cerise-colored feather toque and a much-draped gray taffeta gown banded in black velvet and rustling from head to foot. The more subdued present-day version proved that fashion runs in cycles for it picked up the ever smart color combination of gray and red. The same appealing half-length sleeves were used in the modern dinner gown; the fabric, taffeta, was the same; the back fullness was modified, but much in evidence and even the coiffure of bustle curls and exposed ears was repeated.

Mother's flirtatious girlhood during the early 1900's showed up in her daughter's counterpart. Her original color preference of rich fuchsia was identical with present day tones of plum and crushed grape. Watered moires, bengalines, failles and taffetas were also brought up to date. Wasp-waisted black velvet evening gowns and even a daring black and red hobble skirted dinner gown worn by a very modern girl were all fashion lore plucked from parental pasts.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

New York, Sept. 29. GIRL ABOUT TOWN—A very pretty girl named Gladys Shelley has caught the local eyes an ears this week. She took the name "Shelley" because it once belonged to the famous English poet, and Gladys does rhymes—of a much livelier type. She had a good start on the stage, in the lead of "Moon Over Mulberry Street" some years back, but then she became ill, so while she was looking for another job, she began writing lyrics. She's even selling them in Tin Pan Alley. Which goes to show that a pretty girl can keep busy at one thing or another, especially if she has adopted the name of "Shelley."

I HEAR that Patsy Kelly, the jolly comedienne, may sneak away from the movies this season and be seen in a new edition of the "Follies" on Broadway. My, they were great days when Patsy was stooge-in-chief for Frank Fay in the old days of big-time vaudeville. I note that some high-class doctor read a paper in Atlantic City to the general effect that "half a brain is as good as a whole one"—which is something thousands of us have suspected all along. Of course, the medico didn't say which half, but perhaps it doesn't matter...

Vacation Hicks

"What did you think of the luncheon?"

"Say, I was never so embarrassed in my life! Did you see my hands?"

"Did you see mine?"

"I almost got under the table."

"I had to eat with my fists clenched."

"I could just see everybody staring at me all the time—with this old fuchsia nail polish."

"But imagine me! Still wearing orchid! And everybody else in those new bright reds!"

"Yes, even Maude Dowd. Say, what was that color she had?"

"Dare devil, so she said. And Nell Mossy's was Bonfire! And imagine ME with Orchid!"

"Well, after all, when you've been away on vacation you're expected to be a little dowdy."

"Still Barbara Trot's been away and yet she had that new Flame."

"Well, I don't care—I don't think those blazing reds are very refined."

"As a matter of fact, I don't either. I think they're extremely vulgar."

"Another thing, I noticed Harriet Goode still stuck to her natural."

"Oh, well, Harriet always tries to be original. Say though, wasn't she a mess? Did you notice her stockings?"

"No, what about them?"

"Why, she was still wearing Tropical Sand!"

"No... Well as far as that goes, I might as well admit I had on my old Shark's Delight. That's why I kept my legs under the table."

"Well, of course, I was still wearing Chili Sauce. But it's certainly a lot darker than Tropical Sand."

"Say, did you notice Estelle Hopp's face?"

"Yes. What on earth was the matter with it?"

"Why she's still wearing summer make-up!"

"Well, that's one thing I will say for myself—I had on my fall powder."

"Say, did you see Adele Tapp—with those light beige gloves?"

"Yes, and Julia Bounce with WHITE ones!"

"Well, I might have had on Fuchsia nail polish, but I'd have better sense than to wear light gloves with a fall outfit."

"Me too—still I've got to do something about myself quick. The first thing I want to get rid of this old Orchid nail polish."

"What are you going to have—Daredevil? They say it's the reddest one."

"No, I think it's cheap looking. Besides men hate those bright reds."

"Men like something more subtle. I think I'll try Ardent."

"I like something a little gentler. I think people—men especially—always think things about women with too-loud nails."

"Still—whoever notices you if you wear shell pink?"

"Yes, and if we go to the Swagg's luncheon and see all the girls again—"

"You know I believe I'll try this Daredevil once—just to see how it looks."

"I think I'll try Bonfire."

For Many Prizes;
Convention Business
Sessions Are Today

Delegates to the fifth annual convention of the Virginia Association of Rescue Squads will get down to business today in Alexandria, after opening their meeting yesterday with a parade, first-aid and equipment contests and other informal activities. Twenty squads from Virginia, Maryland, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and the District of Columbia participated in the opening program.

At 9 a. m. today the convention business session will open in the auditorium of the Virginia Public Service Co., while at 2:30 p. m. contests will be held for Virginia Association members only. A banquet and dance beginning at 7:30 p. m. will close the convention.

The announcement of winners in yesterday's contests was deferred until tonight, when all prizes will be presented at the banquet. Squads participating in the parade were competing for a prize to go to the best appearing company, while additional awards will go to the squad truck carrying the most equipment. The winner of the first-aid tests, and the company coming the longest distance to attend the two-day meeting. The distance prize will go to one of two New Jersey companies, Springfield or Point Pleasant Beach, following a check of mileage records.

The most impressive display of equipment was shown by the Virginia Association members, and some unusual items were presented. The Roanoke squad came equipped with deep-sea diving outfit for salvage work in rivers and lakes, while the Lynchburg ambulance arrived with two portable outboard motors in tow. Both Lynchburg and Roanoke also carried asbestos suits used for rescue work in burning buildings, and numerous other pieces of modern equipment.

Rescue squads participating in the contests included Arlington County, Covington, Lynchburg, Salem, Roanoke, the Virginia Bridge Company, of Roanoke, Viscose Corporation, of Roanoke; Glenn Dale, Md., Rockville, Md., Spring Lake, N. J., Point Pleasant Beach, N. J., Bucks County, Pa., and several others. One college was represented, the Virginia Polytechnic Institute at Blacksburg having sent its squad.

Judges for the contests yesterday were H. L. Leonard, of the Washington Gas Light Co.; Sgt. Julian Fincher, of the District of Columbia Fire Department; and Jack Perage, of the Roanoke Life Saving Crew.

Classes Normal Despite War
As 2,306 Middies ReassembleNeither Tragic Deaths of Four Classmates
Nor Europe Aflame Disrupts Routine
Of Academy as 94th Year Starts

Annapolis, Sept. 29.—Europe's newest war had no effect on the lives of 2,306 midshipmen who entered the Naval Academy today for the opening of the ninety-fourth academic year at the great school of the sea.

The 1899 midshipmen were the first to return to their academy with a major war raging since the midshipmen of 1914—graying commanders now—came back from summer leave to find Europe aflame.

The rumbling guns of Europe had no echo here today. Classes resumed effortlessly and normally under the time-clock precision of Navy discipline.

The 1899 parallel with conditions 25 years ago was almost exact. Midshipmen were the same eager, serious youngsters as the 1914 class—some of them, indeed, the sons of 1914 midshipmen.

It was not until April, 1917, when American entered the war, that the academy speeded up production of officers to command the war-expanded fleet.

That war found the academy ready, geared to the emergency, but there was no talk of an American war today. Academy plans for a possible war expansion are an official secret.

In 1917, the four-year course was reduced to three years. Cultural studies, held "desirable" in peace, but less than vital in a war, were abandoned. Academy courses were stripped to war essentials.

But 1914 records show that nothing at the academy changed in the first years of Europe's last war. Academy authorities said, classes and courses are the same as last year. There is a normal complement of midshipmen, 2,306 now to 2,312 last year.

First formations started at 12:15 p. m., with luncheon in the mess hall. The assembled regiment was officially told of the death of four of its members, the midshipmen killed yesterday in the highway crash at Braden, Tenn. But not death, nor war, could disrupt the competent precision of academy routine as the year began again.

To PWA Official
Of Baltimore

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, Sept. 29.—The appointment of Wilson T. Bullard, of Baltimore, as chief engineer for the State roads commission, succeeding Nathan L. Smith, was announced today by Maj. Ezra B. Whitman, commission chairman.

Bullard will take over on Monday. His salary will be $8,000 a year.

Bullard, called by Whitman "fully qualified" for the post, was graduated from Cornell University in 1916, and served with the Fifth Combat Engineers Regiment of the Eightieth Division in the World War. He held engineering posts in Passaic, N. J., and Winchester, Va., before coming to Baltimore in 1921 as an engineer for the city paving commission.

In recent years he served as chief engineer for the Maryland-Delaware district public works administration and the metropolitan district commission of Baltimore County.

Smith has been with the roads commission since 1935, appointed temporarily by former Gov. Nice as chairman of the commission, then being named engineer.

O'Connor to Have Double Role
At Hancock Bridge DedicationWill Be Honor Guest and Also Host
To Throng of Notables Expected at Ceremonies Set October 7

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Sept. 29.—Gov. Herbert R. O'Connor has an assignment not covered in the etiquette books—he must be both honor guest and host at ceremonies on October 7, dedicating the new Potomac River Bridge at Hancock.

Burgess Omar N. Carrier, of Hancock, issued the double-barreled invitation to O'Connor when the ceremonies were first proposed. The Governor will be the honor guest of the town of Hancock, and the burgess also asked him to act as host to the Governors and Congressional delegations of Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Virginia who have been bid to the affair.

Invitations have already gone out to the Governors, Senators and Representatives in addition to some 300 Federal and State highway officials, industrial leaders and political figures bid to the ceremonies. Host O'Connor said present plans call for a welcome to the visiting officials at a luncheon at the Woodmont Rod and Gun Club.

Then Guest O'Connor will deliver the chief address at the dedicatory exercises, which will follow a parade and motorcade from the gun club to the bridge site.

Burgess Carrier informed the executive offices that the dedication is attracting wide interest in western Maryland. Preparations

V. E. A. Expert
Advises Raise
In Income TaxSays Revision Would
Boost Va. Revenues
By $2,000,000

By the Associated Press

Richmond, Va., Sept. 29.—Virginia, with a "tax burden far below average," could obtain more than $2,000,000 additional revenue a year through revision of the personal and corporation income tax and still not exceed the average tax rate of competing States, Dr. Alvin B. Biscoe, Bucknell University economist, said today.

The State's personal and corporation income tax rates are below the average in the South, he said, and could "justly be used" to produce "anywhere from $1,036,000 to $1,557,700 additional from personal income, and $1,000,000 additional from corporate incomes.

Dr. Biscoe, in the second report on his study of possible ways of raising upward of $6,000,000 to finance the "three-point" education program, said he found that on a $5,000 gross income of a married couple with no dependents, the tax varied from $130 in Iowa to $25 in Arkansas, California and New Mexico.

The average of $61.07 was 81¢ in excess of Virginia's tax of $45, and only eight States imposing general income taxes on a graduated basis showed a levy smaller than Virginia.

"In the $50,000 class," he continued, "Virginia's position is even lower—only two States collect less than Virginia. The tax varies from $6,140 in North Dakota to $11,125 in New Mexico. The average, $2,471.70, is nearly 1,100 in excess of Virginia ($1,385)."

Dr. Biscoe said a four per cent tax on corporation income, in place of the present three per cent rate, would yield $2,380,116, or an increase of $940,029, while a 4.25 per cent rate would yield $3,370,123.25, or an increase of $1,050,036.25.

"In keeping with Virginia's record for fair tax schedules, either a four per cent or a 4.25 per cent rate could be imposed without exceeding the average (4.31 per cent) of competing States," he said.

Knights Joust,

At Charles FairSasser, Tawes
Are Speakers for
'Southern Md. Day'

Special Dispatch to The Post

La Plata, Md., Sept. 29.—Charles County's sixteenth annual fair celebrated Southern Maryland Day today offered a first showing of the brilliant costume pageant, "Tobacco Humoresque," and heard a favorite son compare this happy countryside with the horrors of war overseas. A tournament in which "knights" tilted for the honor of naming a queen was an afternoon feature.

Livestock judging and a team-pulling contest opened the program, while the afternoon was given over to a championship costume tournament at which Representative Lansdale G. Sasser, of nearby Upper Marlboro, and State Comptroller J. Millard Tawes were orators.

"Tobacco Humoresque," a pageant depicting the beginning of the tobacco industry in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, was the only event on the night program.

Cities Hatred Abroad

Representative Sasser, born and reared in Southern Maryland, told tournament knights they should be "humbly thankful that, amid an atmosphere of friendliness, they can breathe the air of freedom untainted with isms and suppressions."

"While practically all of Europe, in bitterness and hate, is contending with bombs, poison gas and bullets, we stand here today to friendly tournament," he said, describing Southern Maryland as "a happy countryside, inherently appreciative of the majesty and beauty of its hills and waters."

"When we remember that the last war was fought to end wars," he continued, "and when we recall that treaties and international law were far more solemn obligations in the period when Monroe admonished us against engaging in European conflicts than they are today, we can readily see that our entering European disputes is even less justified now."

Urges Stronger Defense

Montgomery
Halts Cars
With D.C. TagDrive Against
Motorists Who Failed
To Get Licenses
Within 30 Days

Montgomery police yesterday began a checkup of residents of the county who have failed to comply with the State law requiring Maryland tags within 30 days after establishing residence.

Posting themselves at the District line on Wisconsin and Connecticut avenues early yesterday, police halted all Washington-bound cars displaying D. C. tags, questioned the drivers as to their residence, and jotted down their license numbers. More than 150 cars were stopped, but no arrests were made. Police dismissed the drivers with the warning that they would be fined if they did not obtain State license plates within ten days. Several hours later the police substation was flooded with applications for Maryland tags. Police estimated they had more than 200 inquiries.

The ten-day period of grace given by police will be a money saver to the negligent motorists, since starting next week only half a year's taxes will be charged on automobiles registered in the State. The "tag" year in Maryland starts April 1 and is divided into quarters. Motorists getting their tags this week would have to pay taxes for three-fourths of a year.

Show Tomorrow

The first flower show to be held this year by the Sligo Park Hills Garden Club will be staged tomorrow at a tea to be given from 4 to 6 p. m. at the home of Mrs. George Ellington, 6100 Saratoga avenue, Silver Spring, Md.

Silver Spring Meeting
Monday on Neutrality

Howard Bailey, Washington news commentator, and Miss Mary Hastings, of Baltimore, will speak before the Women's Democratic Club of Silver Spring, Md., at a "neutrality" meeting Monday night at the Jesup Blair Community House.

Both speakers will discuss repeal of the arms embargo with Miss Hastings arguing for the embargo and Bailey speaking against it. Mrs. R. M. Poole will preside.

This Morning

With Shirley Poelch

There is no truth to the report that the field hands who tore down Griffith Stadium's prize ring and receded the turf for football games were equipped with gas masks yesterday, but it might have been a good idea. Either that or fumigation. Only a few hours before, a decision handed down by a referee and a judge declared Joey Archibald the winner over the winner, Harry Jeffra.

The aroma of that decision by Referee Benny Leonard and Judge Frank Schuyler continues so heavy that the Allies ought to import it as a tank barrier and quit worrying about Germany. It smelled distinctly of the fishwives crossed with the city dump. Archibald didn't retain his title; Leonard and Schuyler restored it to him in an amazing and incredible move after Jeffra had made a chump of the champ.

It was another illustration of Archibald luck. Archibald hails from Providence and there is evidence that it may not be Providence, R. I. The decision that saved his title Thursday night was akin to Heaven-sent. The Archibald luck held out. There has been previous evidence that the champion is distinctly luck-anointed.

"We Beat Archibald Club" Keeps Growing

He retains the title despite the fact that the "We Beat Archibald Club" is getting to be a considerable company of featherweights. He has been knocked out by Pete Scalzo, licked by the Venezuelan Simon Chavez and Jeffra and Leo Rodak. But all of those fellows are still seeking the crown that Archibald holds.

He was a luck guy the first time he ever fought in Washington where he began his climb as a $500 preliminary boy against some forgotten nonentity. He fought on a card sponsored by the District Boxing Commission despite the fact that at the time he was under suspension by the National Boxing Association for fouling a fighter in Providence.

The District Commission, one of the strongest affiliates of the N. B. A., had no right even to accept Archibald on the fight card, but somehow the order from N. B. A. went astray. The District Commission was never notified and Archibald, keeping his mouth shut, volunteered no incriminating information. As a suspended fighter, he won the fight and began his climb up the fistic ladder.

He leaped into national notice in the featherweight division by winning Goldie Ahearn's featherweight elimination tournament in Washington, but his luck was with him in that, too. He fought and beat Tony Dupre in the finals, but the evidence is that Archibald may never have reached the finals, save for the timely intervention of the celestial waterworks.

Terrific Downpour Eliminated Rightful Victor

In that tournament was Pete Scalzo, Pete Reilly's clever New York featherweight, who was fighting Dupre in the semifinals. Scalzo was clearly the class of that fight and was winning it until the final rounds. Then a cloudburst hit the Griffith Stadium ring. In the terrific downpour, the fine boxing skill, and clever footwork of Scalzo was nullified. The conditions suited Dupre, the club fighter, and he slugged through the rain to win the decision.

This was eliminated from the tournament the man Archibald would have fought in the finals. An indication of how Archibald would have fared against Scalzo in that tournament was made plain several months later when they finally did meet in a New York ring. Scalzo knocked Archibald out in the second round. But he didn't win Archibald's title. No, indeed. Archibald's manager had the foresight to make Scalzo come in over the featherweight limit.

Archibald's victories in Washington won him the N. B. A. recognition as champion, but New York didn't recognize him. The New York commission had its own champion, Mike Bellosie. The latter was idle with a long siege of illness and during that illness Gen. John Phelan, chairman of the New York commission, sought to comfort Bellosie with a promise that he would be matched against Archibald for the undisputed title. Phelan kept his promise and Archibald won the title by beating a sick man.

The N. B. A. then insisted that Archibald fight his No. 1 challenger, Leo Rodak. The bout was staged in Archibald's home town of Providence. At the finish, Rodak apparently was the winner, but the judges voted "Archibald." That fact didn't prevent Archibald's home-town fans from setting up furious cries of disapproval and home-town newspapers from crediting the visitor, Rodak, with winning the bout.

Archibald luck is no myth, especially after what happened the other night.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Sept. 29.—It is difficult to decide just how dumb the baseball owners believe the average fan is, but we can get a fair idea from the comical smoke screens the boys are throwing up in Pittsburgh to disguise and sweeten up the simple everyday thing of Pie Traynor, the manager who's team flopped.

Bill Benswanger expressed "keen regret" and what passed for shocked surprise when he made known the fact that he had accepted what he called Traynor's resignation. For a week or two before that, Bill indignantly denied that he planned making a change, but it was so obvious that there would be one that even the dear lady fans, who possess a persevering kind of baseball dumbness, knew that Pie was getting the old brass-knuckle career.

"Pie's long and honorable career, first as a player and the greatest third baseman in the history of the game, and later as manager of the Pittsburgh club; his loyalty, his devotion to duty and his conscientiousness have won for him an envied place in baseball," Benswanger cried, as he tenderly gossiped Traynor on the criminal charge that Cy Blanton had a sore arm. It apparently didn't occur to Benswanger that he was making pretty much of a monkey of himself in firing a guy who had all that to recommend him.

Traynor Helps Transparent Pretense

Traynor helped the transparent pretense. "I believe that a change in managers will put the club up where it belongs and give the fans of the Pittsburgh district a better brand of baseball," Pie is reported to have said. It amazes so strongly of the clear prose of the business office that it even looks mimeographed. Ball players just don't say words like "Pittsburgh district." That's the kind of language the sportsman of the counting room use in discussing the areas in which they commit their shrewd merchandising.

All managers get fired sooner or later, but hardly ever for the reason for which men are fired in every other profession—incompetence. Traynor is a better manager today than he was when he was being hailed by Benswanger as a managerial find of the first water. It's inevitable that he is better today. He has seen more baseball, been through more hardships, and learned more.

He was fired because he happened to be head of a bad ball club which played badly. The fans either stayed away, or heckled when they came, so Benswanger did the same weak thing that every other owner would do. He fired the manager in the simple-witted belief that he was thus taking the customers' minds, if any, off the fact that the Pittsburgh corporation had failed to provide Pie with a ball club. It's a cheaper way out. Financially and morally.

Traynor's case is unusual in that he seems to be one of the few managers in history who was specifically fired for not winning a pennant. The club finished fifth his first year, 1934; fourth in 1935 and 1936, third in 1937 and second last year. The Pirates last season were nipped at the very wire by a miraculous finish on the part of the Cubs. Pittsburgh finally forgave Traynor for Mace Brown's mistake of throwing a critical home run ball to Gabby Hartnett, but apparently the firm excepted Traynor's progressive rise toward the top of the National League to be climaxed this year with the pennant.

Means of Soft-Sapping Customers

The impotence of a manager's ball players is never taken into consideration when, with crocodile tears, the owners fire the pilots as a means of soft-sapping the customers.

Last year, for instance, Traynor's leftfielder, Johnny Rizzo, played in 143 games, hit 23 home runs, knocked in 111 runs; this year he played in 94 games, hit 6 home runs and knocked in 55 runs. Cy Blanton, heavily counted upon in the box won only two games this season because he had a sore arm. Russ Bauers, who won 13 last year, won 2 this year. Bob Klinger's 1934 record was 12 victories against 5 losses; this year it was 14 wins and 17 drops. Mace Brown pitched in 51 games last year, and won 15 games, many of them in crucial relief roles, before he cracked up at the very end of the season. This year he appeared in 47, won 9 and lost 12. Pep Young knocked in 78 runs last season; 23 this year.

And so on down the line. Pie had about as much chance of stopping the swoon of his assorted morningglories as the weather man has a chance of stopping a dropping barometer.

His firing is about as logical as shooting a Government census taker for the drop in the national birth rate. But the average owner, which means Benswanger, is content that the average customer is mentally muscle-bound. Or at least the sterling owner of the Pirates conducted the sacrifice of Traynor as if he thought that this was indisputably true of the long-insulted blanchette.

Cards Show Real Power; Win, 12 to 0

Mountenot, Sachon Stars of Victory; C. U. Makes 12 First Downs in Night Game

Special Dispatch to The Post
Columbus, S. C., Sept. 29.—An underrated Catholic University football team, trotted over the University of South Carolina here tonight, 12 to 0, burning down the gridiron like Sherman burned his way through Columbia in the Civil War.

The Cardinals displayed all the offensive power in the game, making 12 first downs to 3 for Carolina. It was the punting of Mountenot and Sachon that kept the Carolina eleven back on their heels defending their goal line.

It was the same Mountenot who ran the Carolina ends ragged and set up the first touchdown late in the opening quarter where Brostek punched it over.

Guyon Scores Second
Staving off every Carolina attempt to score, the C. U. forward wall was as hard to crack as the Siegfried Line. When pay dirt loomed behind them, the Cardinals stiffened. That was the story of the non-clocking Carolina offense. Early in the fourth quarter Guyon began running wild and on fourth down, 8 yards to go within the 10-yard stripe, he took a lateral pass from Sachon to score.

Over 7,000 fans sat mute in Melton Field as the more powerful Catholic University eleven marched up and down the field, superior in every department.

The Catholic team, unheralded in this land of rice and gravy, burst on the field like a Fourth of July bomb, leaving the favored Gamecocks stunned at the powerful flank attacks and stubborn defense.

100-Yard Punt Sets Stage

A brilliant punt by Mountenot, who booted 60 yards to the Gamecock's 10-yard line, set the Cardinals back on their heels late in the opening quarter and C. U. launched its first touchdown drive on the return kick.

From the Carolina 30-yard line the Cardinals began their march with Pirro bulging his way through the line for 5 yards and Mountenot skirting left end for 19 yards on a scintillating dash behind potent blocking. Mountenot crashed the line for a first down on the Carolina 3 and Brostek barged across the goal two plays later. Pirro's kick for the extra point was wide.

A penalty of 15 yards incurred by the Cardinals when Substitute Omski talked to his mates before the first play, helped the Gamecocks to move into C. U. territory at the outset of the second quarter. In a drive featured by 13 and 7 yard gains by Grugan, and an end run by Robinson, the Gamecocks reached the C. U. 23 before they were halted.

One Central Back Stopped, but Another Reaches Purple Goal

From the crowded scene in the upper photo it would appear yesterday's Central-Gonzaga game was a battle of opposing lines. Johnny Bredbenner, Mount Pleasant fullback, is being stopped by John Mullaney (56) after a 2-yard gain in the first period. The lower photo, however, shows Harry Martin being stopped by Bob Mulvihill, Gonzaga tail back, after an 11-yard dash to Gonzaga's 6-inch line. The next play resulted in Central's first touchdown as it won, 13-0.

Mt. Pleasanters Score Twice in First Half To Triumph, 13 to 0

By Bill Burnett

The murky air above Central Stadium proved the home team's best line of offense yesterday as it opened its season with a 13-0 victory over a surprisingly strong Gonzaga High eleven. Thirty-five hundred fans watched the game, Gonzaga's first defeat in two starts.

Twice Central, with a string of stellar backs, expected to mop up opposition along the ground, went into the air in the first half for the points that made the 13-point difference in the score.

Harry Martin, a lightning-soled halfback, unexpectedly dropped back to pass from the Gonzaga 48 midway of the first period, found Sam Di Biasi in the open and the aerial was good for 22 yards. From there home it was a mere matter of three plunges by Jim Porter, an off-tackle sprint by Martin, and Porter's shove through the middle from the 6-inch line for Central's opening score. Quarterback Benny Steiner was slow getting off the place kick and it was blocked.

Central Bottled Up

The remainder of the first period and the opening half of the second saw Central convincingly bottled by an increasingly potent Gonzaga forward wall. So effective became Gonzaga's ground defense, in fact, that its anti-aircraft protection weakened and the second touchdown of Central resulted.

This time it was Steiner whose aim turned the trick. Standing back of his own 40-yard line he pitched again to Di Biasi, and this time no additional plunges were necessary. Di Biasi caught it on the 30-yard line, as Gonzaga's Fred Rice was pulled in, and raced the distance to the goal with Rice in futile pursuit. Steiner speeded up

Giants Arrive For Redskins Tilt Tomorrow

Champions to Drill This Afternoon at Griffith Stadium

Mighty, even in civilian dress, the champion New York Giants moved into Washington yesterday to await tomorrow's battle with the Redskins. The hulking young men of Coach Steven Owen shouldered their way into a Washington hotel amid the curious gaze of the lobby sitters and after registering, departed immediately to a theater where they were honor guests.

They were the same big, bad Giants who defeated the Redskins, 36 to 0, last fall and went on from that point to win the professional championship from the Green Bay Packers. Off their train piled Tuffy Leemans, George Washington University's pride and leading ground gainer of the Giants; Mel Hein, all-league center for seven years; Ed Danowski, Sammy Baugh's chief forward-passing rival; Ken Strong and Ward Cuff, the field-goal-kicker.

Kennedy Sees Jeffra Fiasco 'Deplorable'

District Commission Suspends Al Weil For 90 Days; Seek Return Archibald Go

Violent repercussions of the Joey Archibald-Harry Jeffra fight were heard on several fronts yesterday, highlighted by the demand by Congressman Ambrose J. Kennedy that the District Boxing Commission be subjected to a thorough Congressional investigation.

Other developments were:

1. Announcement by the District boxing commissioners that they "are not in accord with the decision in favor of Archibald."

2. Suspension of Al Weil, manager of Archibald, for 90 days by the commission following violation of the commission rules against "teaching by seconds."

3. Announcement by the District commission that it would appeal to the National Boxing Association to "use its influence" in obtaining a return match between Archibald and Jeffra.

Congressman Kennedy, ranking member of the District of Columbia Committee in the House and representing Jeffra's home town of Baltimore, issued a statement at the Capital in which he declared "I am firmly convinced that a thorough investigation should be made of every angle of this affair, and if it can be shown that there existed collusion of any kind, those responsible should be dealt with severely."

His statement was based, he said, on testimony of persons who witnessed the fight and on reports of the fight in Washington newspapers. "The District boxing law and the regulations thereunder should be scrutinized carefully in order to determine whether or not it could be strengthened so as to prevent a recurrence of this unfortunate affair," he added.

"While I understand that under the law the decision of the referee and judges is final," he stated, "I am sure that the public in general is entitled to know the high and proper holder of the featherweight championship and should be recognized accordingly."

Ambrose declared he would confer with Representative Randolph Jennings, House committee chairman, as to the advisability of bringing the affair before the full committee "in order that the boxing sport may be operated on the highest possible plane and that contestants be given a square deal and the public assured that the conduct of same will be beyond suspicion of any kind."

Commissioners "Deplore Outcome"

Washington's boxing commissioners, headed by Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, announced following a special meeting that they deplored the outcome of the fight but that the decision must be final under the existing law.

Reports that Max Waxman, manager of the fight, had been arrested, were denied.

Last-Minute Field Goal Beats Temple

Lio's Boot With 20 Seconds to Go Gives Georgetown Contest; 17,000 See Battle

By Jack Munhall.

A Staff Correspondent.

Temple Stadium, Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 29.—A 23-yard field goal by Augie Lio, junior guard from Passaic, N. J., in the last 20 seconds of play gave Georgetown a 3-2 victory over Temple here tonight in the opening football game for both teams.

Lio's kick, delivered from a 45-degree angle with quarterback Joe McFadden holding the ball, wiped out a 2-0 lead the Owls gained on a safety in the fourth period.

12,000 Students Attend

Temple's points were earned when Lou Falcone, reserve Georgetown U. quarterback, was caught behind his goal by Rushon, Owl's end, as he pulled down a high pass from center on an attempted punt from the Georgetown U. 8.

Seventeen thousand fans, including about 2,000 Georgetown students, alumni and friends, were astounded by a late Georgetown U. passing attack which, aided by interference, set the stage for the winning field goal.

The third quarter offered nothing new either in excitement or the mustering of a sustained offensive by either team. Shackled by its own miserable blocking and by the strong Temple forward line, Georgetown flashed little attack, although it picked up its first first down in the waning minutes of the period.

Ghecas Leaves Game

Ghecas, from a spread formation, for the first time showed the speed and shiftness for which he was widely ballyhooed here when he slipped around the end for 13 yards to move the ball from the Georgetown 30 to 43. Georgetown, however, could not press its temporary advantage and Kopelk dropped back and punted out on the Temple 40.

Ghecas was removed from the game after his run, apparently suffering a twisted left leg. He was replaced by Spencer.

Unable to score a single first down in the opening half, Georgetown nevertheless received the first scoring chance of the game when Kaschlag intercepted Jurlewicz's pass on the G. U. 33 and returned it to the Temple 5.

It was a nifty piece of running Kaschlag did after coming up far behind the line and after a pass stopped the Hoyas dead and the Georgetown threat ended four plays later when Augie Lio's attempted place kick from the 25 went wide of the bar.

Before the try for field goal, Gastiglia, who came in to replace Damohrey, gained nothing on a line crack, and two of Kaschlag's passes were batted down by the Owls' secondary.

The kicking duel between Temple's Bowles and Lou Falcone, G. U. reserve quarterback, then continued on fairly even terms and the fierce battle of heavy forward walls took the play away from the backs.

Temple's only serious scoring threat of the half came with the five minutes play when a reverse evolving into a lateral carried the Owls from their 34 to Georgetown's 29 to a total gain of 37 yards. This danger to the Hoyas' goal line fizzled when the center of the G. U. line stopped Bowles inches short of a first on the 20.

Red Sox Sign Cronin for Another Five-Year Term

Boston, Sept. 29 (AP).—Tom Yawkey, millionaire owner of the Boston Red Sox, tonight announced the re-signing of Joe Cronin, manager of the team, for another five-year term. He also said he had signed Jimmy Fox, Ted Williams, Bobby Doerr and Jim Tobin for the 1940 season.

"I am more than satisfied with Joe Cronin's managerial record and I am sure the Boston baseball public agrees with me," Yawkey said. Cronin was purchased from Washington for a reported $150,000 and Lynn Lary in 1934. Yawkey refused to mention Cronin's salary, said to be about $27,000 a year.

Notre Dame, Huskies Favored As Football Opens on All Fronts

By Bill Boni, Associated Press Sports Writer.

New York, Sept. 29.—College football, the game that is "getting so complicated even the second-guessers are having a tough time," makes its official 1939 bow tomorrow. A meeting between Notre Dame and Purdue, each loaded with enough backs to supply half a dozen ordinary teams, serves as the Nation's headliner.

In several ways the Notre-Dame Purdue clash is typical of the times, typical of the development expected to be seen in the above quotation from Columbia's Lou Little. With Saggau, Sheridan, Piepul and Zontini in the Irish backfield, and Byline, Brown and Brock (a Porter's Mite Second Choice Today; Noted Entries to Start at Havre de Grace.

By Walter Haight
A Staff Correspondent

Havre de Grace, Md., Sept. 29.—Chalcedon will be the doubtful starter in the handicap tomorrow, it was learned here tonight.

Havre de Grace, Md., Sept. 29.—There was no surrender to Chalcedon here this morning and there will be none tomorrow. While the majority of trainers hereabouts admit that the W. L. Brann Western Maryland Express is just about the best sound horse now eating oats, there are nine conditions who are not willing to allow Chalcedon the major portion of the $15,000 added Havre de Grace Handicap without making him run for the money.

In fact, all signs point to the Preakness winner facing his rivals in the battle over the 1 1/4-mile course and the opposition is better than fair although Eight Thirty, out with a filled leg, and C. S. Howard's Sorcerer are considered by their absence. However, Porter's Mite, Conquer, Isolator and Fred G. Vanderbilt's newly-purchased Nereids are in the line-up, and to all Chalcedon, assigned 122 pounds, must give weight.

This will be the third test of the season in which Chalcedon, trained by Lou Schaefer, former riding star, has faced other horses. The Brann Brannon won two of these races, the Hawthorne Gold Cup and the Narragansett Special, although he hit the dust behind Fighting Fox and others in the Massachusetts Handicap. While some writers have referred to Chalcedon's opponents in the Hawthorne as "a cheap lot," the Brann right came from behind and won impressively. He whipped Kayak II in the Narragansett Special.

Porter's Mite is likely to be second choice to an odds-on Chalcedon tomorrow. The sort of Porter whipped Chalcedon a week before he went over to take the Narragansett Special. Porter's Mite has been training kindly and gets 111 pounds from his big shot rival.

The heavy assignment given Chalcedon by Racing Secretary Charles McLennan should result in a fair long shot for several light-weighted horses in the field.

Open Local Seas Against Hampton-Sydney Today

Veteran Array Of Material In Line-up

Coach Dobson to Start 9 Lettermen and Two Sophomores Against Virginia Rivals

Determined to preclude a recurrence of its surprise opening game defeat by Richmond last year, the University of Maryland football team has orders to get away to a fast start and keep digging until the end today against Hampton-Sydney in its first 1939 test at College Park. Game time is 2:30.

With a veteran array of material, including much better reserves than it had last season, Maryland will rule a decided choice over the Virginia although Coach Frank Dobson expects the victory to be by more than two touchdowns.

9 Lettermen in Lineup

The Terps starting lineup will comprise nine lettermen and two sophomores, one of whom, Bob Wharton, is subbing for the regular center, Bob Smith, who is the only first string Terp unavailable because of injury.

The other first-year player in the Maryland lineup will be Milton Lumsden, a husky fullback, who won his spurs through consistently fine blocking and tackling in pre-season scrimmages.

The Maryland backfield of Pershing Mondorf and Frank Skotnicki, at halves; Lumsden, at full, and Joe Murphy, at quarter, on paper looks as the Terps' best-balanced quintet in several years. It doesn't include a runner the likes of Jarvin Jim Mead or a passer of the accuracy of Charley Weidinger, but it packs unusual speed, good blocking and a dangerous triple-threat in Mondorf. Merle Duvall, sophomore passing star, and Fred Widener, veteran blocking back, are capable reserves.

Sensation of Practice

Mondorf, a 190-pound senior, has been the sensation of fall practice at Maryland, after Coach Dobson shifted him to the tail back position. In the past Mondorf, the best place-kicker in the local college ranks, had been most valuable as a blocker and defensive player, but none guessed he would develop into the runner and passer that he has.

Murphy, wiry little Southern Conference dash champion, is another Maryland back well worth watching. Murphy is not product by any means. Murphy nevertheless is a threat to score any time he scoots around because of his extraordinary speed. He has run the 100 in 10.8 and the 220 in 21.3.

Skotnicki, now fully recovered from injuries, promises to add Mondorf and Murphy with an excellent brand of blocking for the Terps. He has few if any backs who excel Frank in this department.

Plane Exports Set New Top Before War

Large Foreign Orders Unfilled Now Due To Neutrality Law

By the Associated Press
Airplane exports from the United States reached a record total of $12,136,845 in August, just before invocation of the American neutrality law shut off major shipments to Europe, according to Government figures.

The August figure, which was 34 per cent more than in July and 126 per cent more than in August last year, included $5,221,926 for England, and $4,801,280 for France. Both these warring nations have large airplane orders in this country which cannot be filled now because of the neutrality law, unless it is modified.

England's August purchases included 44 planes, 50 engines and many airplane accessories and parts. France took delivery on 57 planes, 129 engines and extra parts and accessories. Although France bought more units, England bought more expensive planes.

The remainder of August exports was divided between Canada, the Netherlands Indies, the Philippine Islands and Japan.

The European war sharply reduced gold shipments to the United States last week. The Commerce Department said only $366,950 worth of the yellow metal came here in the week ended September 22, compared with $1,000,000 in the preceding week.

Sub-Dangers Cited
For more than a year before the war broke out Europe had consistently sent large quantities of gold here, mostly for safe keeping and in preparation for possible purchase of war materials. By last week, however, submarine dangers and other influences had curtailed shipments.

Last week's gold receipts here included $29,742,429 from Canada, $2,400,330 from Colombia, and $3,345,000 from Hongkong. Previously, England, France, Switzerland and the Scandinavian countries had been large shippers.

Silver imports in the week totaled $1,288,250, about the usual amount and included $215,674 from Canada and $655,122 from Mexico.

Steel Firm Returns Salaried Workers To Six-Day Week

Pittsburgh, Sept. 29 (AP)—The Jones & Laughlin Steel Corporation announced today it would return all salaried employees to a full six-day work schedule and full pay on October 1 because of the "extra work" involved in the present increased volume of business.

Salaried employees had been working on a reduced five-day week schedule, with a one-sixth cut in pay, since February 1, 1938. Spokesmen said the increase would apply to employees of approximately 20 district offices, but did not disclose the total number of salaried employees.

Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corporation, which last spring reduced its work schedule for salaried employees from 5 1/2 days, announced a few days ago it was restoring them to the 5 1/2 day basis as "work demands it." A blanket order for the restoration of all "white collar" employees to the longer week has not been issued.

Wrigley Declares Extra of 50 Cents

Chicago, Sept. 29 (AP)—Directors of the William Wrigley Jr. Co. declared today a special extra dividend of 50 cents per share, payable November 1 to stock of record October 20.

Directors also declared the regular monthly dividends of 25 cents a share, payable November 1. December 1 and January 3 to stock of record on the twentieth day of each preceding month.

$100,000,000 Bills Offered by Treasury

The Secretary of the Treasury gave notice yesterday that tenders are invited for Treasury bills to the amount of $100,000,000, or thereabouts. They will be 91-day bills and will be sold on a discount basis to the highest bidders. Tenders will be received at the Federal Reserve banks, or the branches thereof, up to 2 p. m. Monday.

Tenders will not be received at the Treasury Department.

Makers Not to Boost Output of 'War Toys'

New York, Sept. 29 (AP)—The well-dressed Christmas tree, in the opinion of toy manufacturers today, will display no more "war toys" this year than last.

There will be, however, it was stated, an increase in "toy models of national defense equipment."

C. L. Kingsbury, president of the Toy Manufacturers of the United States of America, said as much in opening the association's annual convention.

The industry's sales this year, he estimated, would be about $230,000,000, an increase of 5 per cent over last year.

Cotton Upturn Meets Obstacle In Hedge Sales

List Closes 1 to 8 Points Higher In Brisk Trading

New York, Sept. 29 (AP)—Cotton futures rose 5 to 8 points today while whispers of peace bids filtered out of some European capitals.

Biggest stumbling block to wider gains was a wave of hedge selling during the first half hour. Cotton is coming to market in the initial call, and the market soon caught its balance, however, and prices slanted up. Late improvement in some outside markets acted as a further spur.

Worth Street reported some second-hand were quoting goods slightly under list quotations but prices on the whole held firm. Total sales of the week were estimated at close to current output.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn

From the National Press Club in Washington, where some journalists pass their leisure moments at the national diversion of contract bridge comes a letter concerning the hotly contested point of a correct lead.

The letter reads:

"I wonder if you would mind settling—a mutually selected arbiter—a point of play that came up in a bitterly contested husbands versus wives rubber game last night.

"We husbands had been having all the pictures for nearly an hour when the wives, sitting East and West, came up with a three-no-trump bid. East was declarer, no suits having been mentioned, and I sat South with this string of diamonds and not the remotest re-entry.

Diamonds Q 10 9 8 6 3 2

"I led the ten-spot. Dummy went down with K 4 in diamonds. After some hesitation, East (my wife) played the king, only to see it fall under North's ace. His small diamond return picked up East's lone jack. And I ran off the remaining six tricks to set the contract three tricks. (It developed later, they had every other face card in the deck and an easy game in either major.)

"The argument which followed, inevitably, concerned the legitimacy of my lead, East claiming that the natural lead was the queen from that holding. I denied this, but am frank to admit that I could quote no authority to support my lead of the ten-spot. Nevertheless, under similar circumstances I would make that lead every time.

"Can you tell us whether it was a 'good' lead or, as East and West insist, simply a lucky one, lacking all justification in playing technique?"

We have heard a great deal about "feminine intuition," but we never realized there was such a thing as "masculine intuition," for that is what the lead of the writer comes under since he admits he had not consulted a rule book.

There is nothing more abhorrent to us than to side with a man against his wife, particularly in affairs of contract bridge. But honesty and the rule book make it impossible for us to do otherwise in this instance.

The particular rule book consulted contained the names of Ely Culbertson, Milton C. Work, Theodore A. Lightner, Madeline Kerwin, Dudley Courtenay and many others. It reads:

"Lead against no trump: Holding Q 10 9, four-card or longer suit lead 10.

"Suit establishment being the prime consideration at no trump, the lead of the top of touching honors, particularly when it is a high sequence is the ideal lead in that as a result it sets up the suit promptly.

Seasoned Timber

By Dorothy Canfield

For the twenty-second time, Timothy Coulton Hulme has gone through all the necessary tasks connected with opening the Clifford (Vt.) Academy, of which he is principal. The school year means more people at Miss Peck's, where Timothy and his Aunt Lavinia take supper each evening, and there he meets Susan Barney, the new third-grade teacher who is waiting on table for her board. Any of the habitués or the newcomers is better company than talkative and self-centered old Mrs. Washburn, but one night Timothy deliberately studied the problem of why she is such a successful bore. After a day of discouragements at the academy, overheard with Aunt Lavinia's opera-sing on the phonograph, it is almost a relief to lead on Mrs. Washburn.

Chapter VII

HE FOLDED his napkin, allowing himself the derisive smile of cold, secret, satisfied malice. And looking up casually, was staggered to see young Susan Barney's eyes deeply fixed on him—on him—with a penetrating intimate expression of emotion.

He was as startled and shaken as if, in a room where he had locked himself up to do something he was not very proud of, he had turned around to find an intruder greedily watching him; and in a reflex of resentment flashed across the table at her the offended black scowl which says, "What are you doing in here where you don't belong? Spying on me are you?"

As if his look had been tangible, he saw it flick stingingly across her face. A painful rush of blood to her cheeks showed that she was as startled as he to find herself in that secret room. Her soft, brooding expression had been as though she were gazing from so far within as to have lost touch with outer reality. She looked quickly down, and her folded napkin in the ring, and keeping her lowered eyes on her hands, began humbly to gather the dishes together to carry into the kitchen. For a moment longer, Mr. Hulme sat still. When he stood up he gave his shoulders a shake, asking himself incredulously, "What in creation was all that?" and glanced around to find his aunt. But it took him a moment to recover from his surprise and disquiet. Wherever he turned his eyes, he looked again into that brooding intimate gaze that came from very far within, and sank as deeply into what it saw. "What under the sun did she think she was looking at?" he asked himself, perturbed, uneasy, and said aloud, "Well, Aunt Lavinia, ready to start back!"

They walked slowly from the lighted room, yellow glow in the clear blue of the autumn twilight outside. The first vividness of his astonishment had passed. He was able to bring a little of his usual common sense to bear. "She was probably thinking of something else, altogether," he thought. "Probably had quite forgotten where she was."

If so, his blast of resentment had been both inexplicable and horrifying to her. He must have looked like the devil himself to have shattered as by a blow of his fist the innocence of her unconsciousness. He, not she, had been the one to crash brutally into a room where a human soul had thought itself safe and alone. He was not usually malevolent. Why had he so savagely put forth all his adult power to cause pain to that harmless young creature? From having seen its daunting effect on generations of adolescents and from having had many irritated complaints of it from his contemporaries, he knew very well how coldly forbidding his worn eagle-face could look when he was displeased. Yet, he hastened to assure himself, he had not been displeased, he had not had time to be more than startled.

BUT THAT remembered look into the very core of another personality made him ashamed not to be honest, not to admit that in fact he had been very much displeased, that he had struck out at the girl because he had had a bad conscience, because he had been caught gloating over a malicious trick. He began a hasty irritable self-defense—Oh, that silly notion of universal good nature! It's dreary. Good Lord! Without a little savory malice, our daily life would be so insipid no intelligent person could stand it. And could I bring my sister sometime, when she's here? She looked down at the stiffened fingers and added pityingly, "It's too bad about your hand!" Her strained intensity had of course, spoken naturally, as any girl might speak to any old person. Aunt Lavinia, of all people, had come to the rescue, had steered a conversation of the rocks into quiet waters.

"Any time you're free," said Aunt Lavinia easily, "and, yes, indeed, bring your sister if you like—if she won't forget. I can't stand fidgeting." To her incident seemed ended. She nodded, and took her nephew's arm to go on.

But he could not of course go on without having said something. Something! By every law of his tradition, by every infinitely repeated precept of his breeding, he must at once find a phrase, a civilized formula, an acknowledgment, an explanation—an apology, at least. After what she had said he could not stand there like tongue-tied boy.

But like a tongue-tied boy, not a word could he find. He sent it racing out to find the answer to an imperative question. That question was not at all whether he should clear up the misunderstanding. When a man puts a purse in his pocket and finds a purse that is not his, he does not debate whether to keep it or not. At least Timothy Hulme does not. He had not had presence of mind enough to break that perfunctory silence which accepted praise that did not belong to him. But he had no sooner walked on beside the unconscious Aunt Lavinia than he was aware of a stolen goods must be returned. At least by Margaret Coulton's son. The question was how to do it. Here was no simple gesture of handing back a faithful of coin. What had he to say except that his apparent kindness to an old lady had been nothing but stony-hearted malice.

It was not disquietude, it was fear he felt at the prospect of making this confession. Not only because it would put him in a singularly poor posture, that indicated a normal pang on his vanity, of course, but more important than his vanity, Clifford peace of mind would be endangered. What he feared was one of those long-drawn-out neighborhood rows which, in a close-knit community like a college faculty, a convent, a military post, a small town, or a large department store, start poisonously from a word, a look, or from nothing, and end by lining everybody up in embittered opposing camps. If he admitted to this girl that he had been making secret fun of old Mrs. Washburn, what assurance would he have that she would not tell other people? She might. He knew nothing about her. He repeated to himself that he knew nothing at all about her, to quiet a reasonable "Oh, yes, you do!" rising from an inner source which he recognized as a primitive instinct and hence easily deluded. Even if she were not a mischief-making by nature, like so many girls, even if she were what she seemed, a good sort of young person, suppose she had a confidential friend with whom she talked things over; all Clifford would soon know the story. And everybody's confidence in him would be shaken. In every conversation he would be the other person wondering hurt and uneasy, "Is he really talking to me, or only trying to make me give myself away?" The chat at Miss Peck's table, now so easy, free, and cheerful—if trivial—would be frozen into suspicious silence. And as to what Mr. Dewey would think of him...

Just once his imagination ran wild, suggested meanly than an admission from him of amusing himself at Mrs. Washburn's expense would be a dangerous club for a teacher to hold over the head of an official superior. But he was instantly ashamed of this. It was ignoble to have such a suspicion of anyone, let alone a decent girl with good intentions written all over her. Retreating from that extravagance, he perceived what it was he was really dreading. It wasn't gossip, or that people would lose confidence in him, it was the idea of betraying to an outsider the existence of that inner world where, free from the legitimate pressure of convention, tradition, and codes, his mind scamped where it would, asking irreverently of everything what kind of a skeleton held it. He would take a great risk in letting anyone else know about the gay, conscienceless lack of respect for the accepted with which this question continually recurred in his mind. He might lose his job. He might lose what was the one element of adventurousness in the routine of his unheroic daily life.

MR. HULME was blushing. Not since his little boyhood had he felt shame so burn his way over his face. For an instant his very eyes were suffused with heat, so that he could barely see through the dusk of the girl's averted head. Aunt Lavinia dropped her arm and took a step forward, saying warmly—not put off as another might have been by having no idea what people were talking about—"You're right, Miss Susan Bar-ney, my nephew Tim's a r-reason for thinkin' better of us all. I'm glad somebody has the wit to know it." She laid her withered hand on the girl's shoulder and asked, "Do ye like music? Would ye care to listen in my room, some free half hour ye might have? I'm always makin' it by machinery since the rheumatism took my hands." She held up her stiff talon-crooked fingers, not tragically, with the resignation of the old.

The girl searched the sunken dark eyes with a long look; and smiled. "Oh, could I? And could I bring my sister sometime, when she's here?" She looked down at the stiffened fingers and added pityingly, "It's too bad about your hand!" Her strained intensity had of course, spoken naturally, as any girl might speak to any old person. Aunt Lavinia, of all people, had come to the rescue, had steered a conversation of the rocks into quiet waters.

But he could not of course go on without having said something. Something! By every law of his tradition, by every infinitely repeated precept of his breeding, he must at once find a phrase, a civilized formula, an acknowledgment, an explanation—an apology, at least. After what she had said he could not stand there like tongue-tied boy.

But like a tongue-tied boy, not a word could he find. He sent it racing out to find the answer to an imperative question. That question was not at all whether he should clear up the misunderstanding. When a man puts a purse in his pocket and finds a purse that is not his, he does not debate whether to keep it or not. At least Timothy Hulme does not. He had not had presence of mind enough to break that perfunctory silence which accepted praise that did not belong to him. But he had no sooner walked on beside the unconscious Aunt Lavinia than he was aware of a stolen goods must be returned. At least by Margaret Coulton's son. The question was how to do it. Here was no simple gesture of handing back a faithful of coin. What had he to say except that his apparent kindness to an old lady had been nothing but stony-hearted malice.

It was not disquietude, it was fear he felt at the prospect of making this confession. Not only because it would put him in a singularly poor posture, that indicated a normal pang on his vanity, of course, but more important than his vanity, Clifford peace of mind would be endangered. What he feared was one of those long-drawn-out neighborhood rows which, in a close-knit community like a college faculty, a convent, a military post, a small town, or a large department store, start poisonously from a word, a look, or from nothing, and end by lining everybody up in embittered opposing camps. Wage Scale Session
Scheduled Next Week

The six employees in the Welfare and Recreation Association warehouse who threatened to strike recently to obtain salary adjustments, are scheduled to negotiate with the association, a Government-sponsored organization, next week when the United Cafeteria Workers Union contract comes up for consideration.

The negotiation between the two worker groups and the association will be conducted jointly, union spokesmen stated.
